"FIRST NIGHT" Sees THE PICTURES JUMP OFF THE SCREEN

A film which combines colour, sound and stereoscopic vision has arrived in Hongkong. It is a trick film which runs for about ten minutes, but is a shape of things to come in moving pictures.

Before I saw it I was comfortably conservative about the cinema. After all, one can completely lose oneself in a good film. The fact that the images on the screen are in two dimensions and not three does not bother the ordinary man.

I was inclined to think that the three-dimensional cinema would be no great advance. That it would add nothing to the loveliness of the face of a Dietrich, nor increase the realism of the screen drama.

Now, having seen Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Audioscopiks" which is released for public entertainment at the King's Theatre as from yesterday, I have changed my mind. I can see the perfected stereoscopic film becoming another forward step in the cinema.

"Audioscopiks" has tones of colour, but they are not important. Its dramatic quality is its power of making images leap right off the screen and into the auditorium. It gives an entertainment which is no longer bounded by the size or the plane of the sheet on to which the picture is projected.

Within "Touch"

It does more than give the picture the roundness of the stage production; it projects the actors into the audience so that one feels one can touch them by stretching out a hand.

A girl is seen swinging. When the swing comes forward she seems to leave the screen and her feet endanger one's head. A man offers you a drink. He holds out the glass and one would swear that it was six inches away. Then he turns the soda-water siphon on you and a stream shoots out straight at your face.

There is a motor-car ride with swerves and collisions and it is so realistic that one's foot instinctively presses the carpet. Another man brings out a rifle, raises it, so that it sticks out from the screen, the muzzle, seemingly, being within a foot of your head. This is a sensation that the moving picture of to-day is incapable of giving.

Last month several of the original films shown by Lumiere in London forty years ago were screened in London. These pioneer efforts were entirely concerned with showing events like the launching of a boat, the demolition of a building, the stopping and starting of a train.

"Audioscopiks" is in the same state of development. But the man with the gun and the girl on the swing will be as important in the progress of "living pictures" as the boat, the train and the falling building. And we shall not have to wait another 40 years before the principles of stereoscopy will be an essential part of the cinema.

The catch about "Audioscopiks" is that one has to use a pair of spectacles, one lens red and the other green, to see the third dimension. Drop the spectacles, and the picture on the screen is just a blur of the two colours. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will not make a feature film by the process until invention has overcome the need of the spectacles. But in the meantime the company has given the King's Theatre 20,000 spectacles so that when "Audioscopiks" is shown to-day and on Friday and Saturday the audience will be able to enjoy it. And it is the most amusing and sensational "short" I have seen.

Russia's Huge DOG-HERO OF WAR Submarine IS DEAD Fleet SOLDIER'S FUNERAL FOR "RAGS"

BIGGEST IN WORLD

The German Admiralty states that Russia has secretly built the mightiest submarine armada in the world.

According to official figures which have emanated from Berlin, 36 Soviet submarines are already in commission, while many more are under construction.

The present strength of other navies in submarines is as follows:

France	92
U.S.	90
Italy	77
Japan	67
British Empire	53
Germany	28

German information on Russian naval matters is usually very reliable, and in the present instance, full evidence is offered in support of this revelation of Soviet naval power.

The official statement adds that, since 1932, Russia has been energetically building submarines, destroyers, and high-speed motor torpedo-boats, to the neglect of larger vessels. Now, however, the shipyards are turning out cruisers as well.

DISPOSITION OF FORCES

According to the same authority, the present disposition of the Russian light forces is as follows:

- BALTIC—40 submarines, 71 destroyers, and motor torpedo-boats;
- BLACK SEA—"At least 20 submarines," 27 destroyers and motor torpedo-boats;
- WHITE SEA—6 submarines and

FAR EAST—30 submarines "probably very many more"—and 30 motor torpedo-boats.

In the Baltic and the Black Sea the light forces are supported by battleships and cruisers. "Practically all the submarines enumerated are brand-new," the German official statement continues. "They are of various types and of original Russian design."

Washington, Apr. 9.
"Rags," a real dog of war, mascot of the First Division of the U.S. Expeditionary Force, is to have a soldier's funeral.

He saw more actual fighting than many a soldier, once saved his life by a parachute descent, and died yesterday at the home of Lieut.-Colonel R. Hardenburgh, here.

This doggy hero joined the U.S. Army one night when Private Jimmy Donovan, absent without leave, was observed by a keen-eyed military policeman straggling along a Paris street. Tucked under the soldier's arm was a very emaciated and dirty wire-haired terrier pup, which he had picked up in the gutter.

The M.P. took both of them in charge. The pup was christened "Rags" and taken on the strength. He went through the Meuse-Argonne campaign, carrying messages through shell-torn and gas-hung sectors until he and his master, Donovan, were gassed and wounded together and the dog lost the sight of an eye.

One of the couple's most thrilling experiences occurred in an observation balloon. A German aeroplane swooped down on it, and Donovan leapt out with "Rags" in his arms.

As his parachute drifted to earth the German airman followed manoeuvring to bring his machine gun into action. Then he noticed the dog, and grinning, he waved his hand, barked cheerily, and soared away.

FOOTPRINT IN WAR MUSEUM
A footprint in ink of "Rags" appears in a copy of his biography, which the 1st Division sent to the Imperial War Museum, London, to lie beside the records of other war heroes.

CROSSING THE WORLD IN TWO DAYS

Luxurious Travel in Fleet of New 90-m.p.h Zeppelins

HINDENBURG MARVELS

(By A Special Correspondent)

Friedrichshafen, Apr. 15. GERMANY'S plans to build a series of giant new Zeppelins were told to me to-day by Capt. Lehmann, who will command the Hindenburg on her maiden voyage to Rio next month.

While showing me over the world's greatest airship he disclosed that orders for the construction of Zeppelins to work on Dutch, Japanese and Russian air services are already under negotiation.

"The future of the Zeppelin type of airship is now assured," said Capt. Lehmann. "There is not the slightest doubt of that."

"The Hindenburg's cruising speed will be 90 miles an hour, and at that figure her progress will be smoother than an ocean liner. You will see, that her comforts are equal to that of a ship."

No Vibration

"The passengers will feel no vibration, they will hear no sound from the engines, and they will be able to book their trips with the knowledge that this great airship will be unaffected by weather conditions."

"We are confident that the Hindenburg will cut the time to Pernambuco by 10 hours, and the outward journey will in future be covered in 2½ days."

"It is difficult to understand why Britain, with her many Empire mail passenger routes, has not concentrated more closely on the airship. The Graf Zeppelin has made 110 Atlantic flights and covered 4,000,000 kilometres without a sign of mishap."

Final Touches

To-day workmen were busy putting the final touches on the Hindenburg in preparation for her first flight.

The interior of the Hindenburg bears a strong resemblance to that of an ocean-going liner. Her broad decks are railed like a ship.

Commander Lehmann showed me the swimming bath, where passengers will be able to take a dip in mid-air, and the luxurious smoking room.

The kitchens are equipped with the latest electric cooking and refrigerating plant.

The entire passenger and crew's quarters in the Hindenburg are recessed into the envelope, and only the control cabin and engines are slung outside. No engine vibration, whatever, reaches the passenger section.

Hot and cold water is supplied to each cabin, and every passenger has a phone.

After the vastness of the other sections of the Hindenburg the control cabin is bewildering in its smallness and simplicity.

The great airship is operated from a control panel which is only slightly more complicated than the average wireless set.

HAND FOUND IN L'ATLANTIQUE

TRAGIC RELIC OF 1933 FIRE

The hand is believed to belong to one of the bodies not recovered after the fire of January, 1933, which caused the death of 17 of the crew of 211.

A workman on a tour of inspection had a terrifying experience. His hurricane lamp went out after he had got some way. Afraid to move further lest he should fall through a broken deck he stood and shouted for help. His calls were heard but it was two hours before he was located.

SECRETS OF RADIO RAY THAT GUARDS WARSHIPS

DETECTS THE PRESENCE OF SUBMARINES

War-Time Device Has Been Developed

There is no mystery about the basic principle of the British anti-submarine device which Mr. Somerset de Chair, the young Conservative M.P. for S.W. Norfolk, stated in the House of Commons recently meant that any submarine coming within striking distance would be in danger of instant destruction. The device is a wireless ray which when reflected from a submarine enables the ship sending it out to fix the position of the enemy.

What is a matter of secrecy to-day is the extent to which it has been developed since its introduction during the war.

Mr. de Chair was no doubt referring to anti-submarine measures which have been developed since the war," said Admiral Sir Roger Keyes, M.P.

Lord Strabolgi, who as Commander Kenworthy served in the Navy during the war, said: "The modern torpedo has a range of about 10,000 yards, although it is very difficult to score a hit at this distance. In my day the old hydrophone arrangement could be used up to depths of about 180 ft., and was mainly useful for spotting submarines lying at the bottom."

It is learnt that the range of the ray is now definitely greater than that mentioned by Lord Strabolgi, but how great it is is a matter of official secrecy. Screens of these rays can now be established which make it practically impossible for a submarine to approach within "killing" distance of a big ship without her presence being detected.

£7,000 PENALTY FOR CUSTOMS FRAUD

A fine of £6,900 was imposed at Liverpool recently on a horse dealer, Richard Leslie Weaver, aged 34, of Malpas, Cheshire, and his clerk, Harold Thomas Brown, aged 29, was fined £190, for having been concerned in a fraudulent attempt to evade Customs duties on imported Irish hunters.

Weaver was also ordered to pay £100 costs. He contended that the duty was leviable on the open market value of the horses in this country at the time of importation, a value which was considerably lower than the amount paid for the horses in a limited market in the Irish Free State.

Roman Catholics Urged to Stand Together

A STATEMENT by the Roman Catholic Bishop of Southwark in his diocesan notes in "The Southwark Record" has some speculation.

"The day may come very shortly," the Bishop writes, "when Catholics in this country will be called upon to follow the lead of the Bishops and to defend their principles in acts as well as words. No opportunity must be lost of preparing now for that day, and possible sources of weakness in our position must be remedied without delay."

It was stated by an official of Bishop's House, Southwark, that no direct political action was implied.

"It merely means a little more organisation of our own Catholic activities. We have various associations of men, women and children. The idea is to organise instead of being purely parochial, so that concerted action can be taken in any Catholic question that may arise."

"It is proposed to have a central committee to deal with such questions."

NOT POLITICAL. The scheme has nothing to do with politics. It relates to our own Catholic activities. For instance,

MORE TRAVELLING BY RAIL

The number of passenger journeys made on the four principal British railways during 1935, according to the Ministry of Transport recently was 1,229,845,000, or just under 30,000,000 more than in 1934.

The number of passengers carried last year was 855,625,000 or 20,000,000 more than in the preceding 12 months. Expenditure during 1935 was £127,400,000, leaving net receipts of £30,300,000, compared with £28,790,000 for 1934.

REVENGE ON A WHITE RAJAH

(By a Special Correspondent)

Heswall, Cheshire, Apr. 18.

I HAVE talked with a woman who lives under the shadow of an Eastern curse which, for almost a hundred years, has brought tragedy and disaster to her family.

She is Mrs. J. Schofield, of Oldfield House, Heswall, and she told me how an Indian scientist, Mr. Manikon, great-grandson of the man who first pronounced the curse, is to-day working to dispel it.

The story began on the 13th May, 1844, when Mrs. Schofield's ancestor, a White Rajah in India, won a law case which gave him jurisdiction over land on which a Vestal Virgins' Temple was built.

The White Rajah renned the temple, and two days later was found stabbed to death.

On the dagger a parchment had been stuck which contained a curse. This has followed his family from generation to generation.

GAS TRAGEDY

The latest link in the tragedy was the discovery of Mrs. Schofield's mother in a gas-filled room in Kensington.

This tragedy caused Mr. P. Manikon to write to Mrs. Schofield.

He told her he was the great-grandson of the man who killed and cursed the White Rajah, and was ready to do all in his power to remove this terrible curse.

"The curse has followed our family for 90 years," Mrs. Schofield told me to-day. "My father died a violent death, and the discovery of my mother in that gas-filled room makes me feel that this is something more than a series of coincidences."

SCIENTIST'S OFFER

The detailed story was told to me by Mr. Manikon, keen-eyed, swarthy scientist of North Kensington.

"When I heard of the mother's death I wrote to Mrs. Schofield," he said.

"I do not wish to see any more harm come to Mrs. Schofield or her family through the revengeful spirits of my ancestors. I want to help her."

"The curse has wrought enough trouble already. If I can meet a member of the family, and found a reunion on a Christian basis, I am only too ready to do so."

THE KING'S OFFICE-ON-WHEELS

Several improvements, suggested by the King, have been incorporated in the new "office-car" which has been added to the royal garage.

A straight-eight, with a special body, the car is fitted with a desk in the rear seat.

The desk, with its special lighting arrangement, was designed by the King so that he can work as he travels on the State papers that claim his constant attention.

Finished black and capable of 85 miles an hour, the car has cost over £1,000.

JIM AND AMY'S UNPAID MEDALS

JEWELLERS who made the medals which were presented to Mr. and Mrs. James Mollison by the city of New York at the end of their trans-Atlantic flight in 1933 have never been paid.

Two medals were given to Jim and one to his wife Amy, states Reuter.

Now the City Treasurer has asked the Board of Estimates to pay a bill of about £35 which has been presented to the city by a firm of jewellers which made the medals.

The Treasurer is without power to pay it, because, no appropriation was ever made to cover the cost of the medals.

Altogether six medals are involved. These were given to the city's distinguished guests between June, 1932, and July, 1935.

Besides Mr. and Mrs. Mollison, medals were given to Amelia Earhart, Wiley Post and General Balbo.

Curate's Wife Wins

Mrs. Everard Royds, wife of the Curate of Heysham (near Morecambe) Parish Church, saw her horse, Pink Coat, win the Lancashire Hurdle Race at Aintree, recently at odds of 20 to 1—and no member of the family had a penny on it.

They do not bet, but the race is worth about £400 to the winner.

How Universe Is Expanding

DISTANCES THAT DEFY TELESCOPES

San Francisco, Apr. 13. A new "catalogue" of the distances and movements of 100 "universes" outside and beyond our sun's system of stars has been issued by Mount Wilson Observatory, home of the world's largest telescope.

Carrying our knowledge of exact movement further out into space than ever before, this catalogue conveys the astonishing information that the most distant universe yet surveyed in this way is moving away from our own at a speed of 24,000 miles a second.

These observations, made in the 100-inch and 60-inch telescopes at Mount Wilson, are taken to provide further confirmation of the theory that the universe as a whole is expanding, as frequently discussed by Sir James Jeans, Sir Arthur Eddington, and other astronomers.

The distance of the fastest moving universe is given as 1,400,000,000,000,000,000 miles. To travel this distance, light would take 230,000,000 years.

The group of universes to which this universe belongs is so distant that only the brightest specimens can be observed in the 100-inch instrument. The distances of the others—150 of them can be photographed—cannot be measured.

GRAVITATIONAL PULL

In another similar "cluster" there are some 200 different universes. The distance of one of the brightest of these is believed to be about the same, although the measurement is in this case less certain. For the measurement of the speed of movement of still more distant members of these groups of universes astronomers will have to wait for the new 200-inch telescope—and even the range of this will be limited compared with the universes awaiting catalogue.

Another feature of the new catalogue is that it has for the first time been possible to obtain records of a sufficient number of universes belonging to a single group to study the mutual movements of the universes within that group.

The provisional conclusion reached is that these groups of universes represent a relatively stable arrangement, which is held together by the mutual gravitational pull of the universes in question.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

GOVERNMENT REPLY TO UNOFFICIALS

NEW SCHEME FROM HOME

At yesterday's meeting of the Legislative Council, during a debate on the Hongkong Government Servants' Salaries Bill, His Excellency the Governor stated that far-reaching proposals for a revision of salary scales had been received from the Secretary of State during the past few days. The scale had already been adopted in the African colonies, and he asked members to vote for the Bill and to allow the question of permanent alterations and adjustments to be considered in the light of the scale submitted from Home.

His Excellency expressed disapproval with the suggestion of a Commission, stating that the felt it would be in the nature of an encroachment upon the functions of the Executive Council.

The Colonial Secretary: With Your Excellency's permission I should like to comment briefly on some of the points raised by Honourable Members who have spoken on this Bill. The Hon. the Senior Unofficial Member has suggested four measures which he considers would effect considerable economies.

Regarding the first of these, very far-reaching proposals for a revision of salary scales have within the past few days been received from the Secretary of State for the Colonies. These proposals will require careful study and the Government is not yet in a position to make a pronouncement on the subject.

The decision of Government to substitute wherever possible dollar salaries for sterling salaries has already been announced and I have nothing to add to the statements already made in this Council.

The Colonial Treasurer is carrying out an investigation of rent and other allowances paid to Government servants. These allowances were carefully considered in 1931 and some reductions were made on that occasion, but it is felt that it may be possible to effect further economies in this direction. It is however worth mentioning in this connection that the proposals of the Secretary of State to which I have referred, include the provision of free quarters even to Senior Officers. Such matters as acting and leave pay are in general governed by Colonial Regulations common to the whole Colonial Service and any proposal to introduce modifications which would place Hongkong officers at a disadvantage compared with those serving in other Colonies would not feel be readily accepted by the Colonial Office, at a time when every effort is being made to secure the unification of conditions of employment in the Colonial Service.

Medical Services

The proposal to transfer to private medical practitioners, on a contract basis, the attendance on Government Servants at present performed by one part-time Medical Officer in Hongkong and one in Kowloon, apart from other considerations, does not appeal to the Government on grounds of economy. The number of officers to be covered runs into thousands and, even at an annual rate far below that commonly charged for such a service, the cost must greatly exceed the cost to Government of the Medical Officers who are now employed on this work. Moreover, the position with regard to these Medical Officers was very fully explained by the Director of Medical and Sanitary Services in his speech before this Council on March 19. They perform many other duties besides attending Government servants, and the Government is satisfied that no reduction in personnel could be achieved by the change.

I pass over the question of the staffing of Government Hospitals, and the proposal to appoint a Commission of Committee to investigate the matters dealt with in the speech of the Honourable the Senior Unofficial Member, as I understand that Your Excellency intends to address the Council on these subjects. I have only one more observation to make; much as the Government regret the necessity for this Bill it is better, in their opinion, to meet the emergency with measures admittedly temporary than to attempt to set up what we hope will be a lasting system without giving most careful consideration to every aspect of the matter. (Applause).

Governor's Reply

H.E. the Governor: There are a few points on which I wish to supplement the remarks made by my honourable colleague the Colonial Secretary. The first is the suggestion that much of the work done by Government doctors at the Government Hospitals could equally well be performed by private practitioners. I wish to make it clear beyond the possibility of misunderstanding that in recording my inability to support that suggestion I am passing no reflection whatever on the ability and skill of the private practitioners in Hongkong which I have every reason to believe, will stand comparison with that of the medical profession in any other part of the Empire. I am opposed to the suggestion because I regard it as an essential factor in Colonial Medical Administration that Government Hospitals should be manned by officers and employees of the Crown; that there must be no room given for any division of responsibility and that in matters of discipline and conduct there must be direct Governmental control, the control of a master over his servant. If there are those who consider that I am wrong in this matter they have of course their right of address to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, but I cannot myself consent to the appointment of a local Commission to examine and report on a plan which in my opinion and in that of my honourable colleague, the Director of Medical and Sanitary Services, is fundamentally wrong in principle. The staffing and equipment of the new Queen Mary Hospital presents, I fully admit, a serious problem and there is no harm in my saying now that I have asked the D.M.S.S. to consider the closing down of the Victoria Hospital, simultaneously with the opening of the Queen Mary. As soon as details of this scheme are ready I shall of course lay them before my Executive Council.

Pirates also had their lighter moods, according to the Cosmopolitan production "Capitaine Blood" now showing at the Queen's Theatre. Here we have Basil Rathbone, famous screen and stage star who personifies one of the Spanish Main's bloodiest cut-throats, making love to one of the beautiful "pirate ladies" with which the film abounds.

Encroachment on Executive Body

And this brings me to the question as to whether a small Commission or Committee should be appointed to look into the problem of salary scales and rent allowances. I have had a long and wide experience of Commissions and Committees and, when there is a strong case to be made, evidence to be taken and to be compiled they can render invaluable service. But when a judgment has to be formed on data already known to a Commission or a Committee would be in the nature of an encroachment upon the functions of the Executive Council. I have very recently received from the Secretary of State a definite salary scheme, already adopted in the African Colonies, for consideration as to its suitability for adoption here and the composition of my Executive Council, official and unofficial, readers of a body thoroughly competent in my opinion to frame a preliminary judgment. I say "preliminary" because I shall naturally consult also the members of Finance Committee in due course on so important a matter. I may remark in passing that the African scales of salaries are in some cases appreciably below our own current ones. I have already taken steps for a review of rent and other allowances and it will be necessary in considering the Secretary of State's despatch to examine all forms of remuneration comprehensively and correlatively. I share the Honourable Mr. Lo's dislike of temporary levies but he could hardly expect an incoming Governor (even now I have been here only just over four months) to precipitate a substantial reduction of salaries which were fixed as the result of a Public Commission only seven years ago. I remember saying in answer to the Address of Welcome that I should make time to leave for London and find it an even harder lesson than I then contemplated. I regret therefore that I must refuse to be hurried on important matters and the proper remuneration of the public service is a very important matter.

Serious Consideration

Mr. Lo claims that his proposal for a permanent cut of 10 per cent has at least the merit of being an attempt to deal seriously with the problem; I can assure him that the measure now before this Council reflects no lack of seriousness on the part of myself or my colleagues. It is admittedly a piece of temporising because the occasion imperatively called for a reduction of the anticipated deficit on our current budget. I do not predicate perfection of this Bill; I do not deceive myself into fancying that it will cause no hardship; but I do believe that it is a reasonable temporisation and one that will not cause hardship which is incommensurate with the deprivations and losses in which economic conditions have involved people in every walk of life outside the Government Service.

In this belief I ask members to vote for the Bill and to allow the question of permanent alterations and adjustments to be considered with due care and without haste in the light of the communication regarding African rates of pay that has just been received from the Secretary of State.

Council then went into Committee, and after the Bill had been read clause by clause, the third reading was proposed and seconded, and the Bill carried.

Other Ordinances

The Attorney General moved the first reading of "A Bill to amend the Buildings Ordinance, 1935"; "A Bill to enable effect to be given to an International Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency, signed on behalf of His late Majesty at Geneva on the day of April 20, 1929, to apply to foreign coin certain enactments relating to British Coin, to assimilate the

H.K. UNIVERSITY GRADUATES

OVER EIGHTY IN GOVT. SERVICE

Questions concerning the number of University graduates employed in the Government Service and their respective salaries were asked by the Hon. Mr. M. K. Lo at yesterday's meeting of the Legislative Council. He asked:

(a) How many graduates of the Hongkong University are at present employed in the Hongkong Government and what are their salaries?

(b) Have representations been made to Government by the University authorities or other bodies as to the salaries which graduates of the University expect to receive from the Government of Hongkong?

(c) What are the facts and materials on which the statement that "University trained Chinese expect salaries equal to those drawn by European Officers" is based?

Government Reply

The Colonial Secretary replied: (a) The number of University Graduates employed in the Government Service is:

Public Works Department: One Assistant Engineer $3,800-$5,600; two Apprentice Engineers $1,800. Medical Department: One Health Officer $5,700-$8,400; sixteen Medical Officers $4,500-$7,600; six House Surgeons, etc. $2,400 per annum.

Education Department: One Head Master $500-$950; Fifty-two University Trained Masters $1,800-$6,000; Four University Trained Mistresses $1,320-$3,000.

Railways: One Assistant Engineer $4,000-$6,000.

(b) No. (c) The statement has since been reviewed and found to rest on undue generalisation. His Excellency therefore authorises me, very gladly in view of his comments on it at the last session, to announce its withdrawal.

penalties for importing and exporting counterfeit coin and to amend certain enactments relating to forgery, coinage and extradition; "A Bill to amend the Midwives Ordinance, 1910"; and "A Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to the establishment of asylums for the detention, custody and care of persons of unsound mind, and others."

The Colonial Secretary seconded, and the first readings were taken. Bills which passed through their final stages were: "A Bill to amend the Summary Offences Ordinance, 1932"; "A Bill to amend the Statute-cumers Island Ordinance, 1889"; "A Bill to amend further the Companies Ordinance, 1932"; "A Bill to regulate the Deportation of Undesirable British Subjects"; "A Bill to make provision for a levy on the salaries of public officers in the Hongkong Government Service" and "A Bill to amend and consolidate the law relating to Telecommunication." Council then adjourned sine die.

BRITAIN'S BUDGET

Whatever may be said of Mr. Neville Chamberlain's Budget proposals, the outstanding feature of the statement which he presented in the House of Commons on Tuesday is certainly the soundness of the British finance system, coupled with the evidence it affords of generally improved conditions. In spite of supplementary votes three times the figures estimated, the financial year has ended with a surplus of three millions sterling, contrasted with an expected excess of revenue over expenditure totalling only half a million. Mr. Chamberlain rightly claimed this as a wonderful demonstration of the buoyancy of the national revenue. In days when most Governments are facing heavy deficits and are quite unable to balance their budgets, the British position must be regarded as amazingly good. For the soundness of the Government's finance methods there can be nothing but praise. When the position is analysed, the thought naturally suggests itself that the situation would be even brighter still but for the necessity, in view of the general international outlook, of huge expenditure on the defence services. The nation, however, has long since reconciled itself to these heavy charges, conscious of the need of real security in these times of general anxiety and widespread uncertainty regarding the future. The programme envisaged by the Government calls for the laying out of tremendous sums, but it is evident that the intention is not to meet the whole cost out of current revenue. Mr. Chamberlain having forecasted the possibility of part being met by way of loan. Such a loan would without question be readily taken up. The Government has with obvious reluctance decided on some increase in taxation, and, on the principle of spreading this over the community generally, the additional revenue is to be found from slight advances in income tax and the tea duty. On the other hand, some concession has been made in increasing the income tax allowance in respect of children and in raising the general allowance for married people. This will offset in some measure the new imposts. Increased taxation, whatever its form, is never popular, but, considering

Have You Ever written to the Editor?

LETTERS of all sorts,
Typed and scrawled:
angry and glad; long and
short; crazy and sensible.

What manner of people write them?

And why?

To get trouble, and a correspondence, all one need do is attempt to answer those two questions.

COMMONER than you might think is the plumb crazy letter. Easy enough to recognise on sight, the nouns are in capitals, almost every other phrase is underlined by a wavy line for emphasis, the handwriting is oddly irregular, name, address, and date may be omitted, rarely are all three present.

Contents are of two kinds. The first is full of hate, makes vague references to malign forces, usually unnamed, full of ideas of persecution, will sometimes boldly assert that the writer of the criticised article is really some one else in disguise.

The other kind is quite grandiose, offers grotesque and cranky solutions to the world's really big problems, suggests pretty bluntly that it is the writer's mission to offer these to an ungrateful, pretty undeserving world, says he.

THE second type is similar but more articulate and, in these educated days, commoner. The latter writer who letting off steam, he is working off some personal problem of his own, though you might not know it. One of the functions of any letter column is to act as safety-valve for his—she is having an oblique or her—relief.

Something written has touched him well on the raw, he is apt to regard it almost as a personal insult, with an acerbity that he would never permit himself in private life, to the point even of suggesting that any one who thinks different is feeble-minded, dishonest and hardly worthy of being permitted to live. His letter is highly charged and explosive, all plainly a result of the sudden release of highly compressed and suppressed emotion.

He may be a disgruntled old gent, neglected and unloved, who blasphemes at the younger generation. In reality, poor old gent, he is being sorry for himself.

Or, an octogenarian lady—she recalls the gracious measures of a delightful long-past quarter-century when she queneed it. The world is naturally not now so good, he half-suspects of being lenth God bless her!

FOURTH is the type—fortunately much the commonest—which no editor can have too much of. . . the informative letter writer . . . has an interesting fact, opinion, argument or suggestion to contribute (there isn't any one of us who hasn't) . . . he knows his stuff, and he writes clearly, concisely, neatly. . . A good article of this type is better than a sloppy article to any editor; and it helps him to keep in contact with his readers, to give them the newspaper service that they want.

FIFTH is the inquirer . . . the writer who asks for some specific service or information. . . Can corns be cured by auto-suggestion? What makes bald men bald? . . . such like.

SO here are some of the reasons why people write to the newspapers:—

- 1 Inquiry . . . to get specific information or service.
- 2 Response . . . to contribute useful information, opinion, argument or suggestion. . . this sort of contributor provides the editor with a sort of straw vote of subscriber-opinion.
- 3 Letting off steam . . . this provides a vicarious emotional satisfaction for those readers who have similar strains in their bonnets.
- 4 The crazy letter . . . a very extreme degree of 3.
- 5 Exhibitionism . . . a motive only abnormal in excess and often motivating quite valuable stuff.

READERS whose letters would be most valued often hesitate to write, thinking: "What good can my letter do?"

But don't forget that a newspaper should really—perhaps ideally—be the result of an interaction between its readers and its Editor.

The letter to the Editor is an important part of that interaction. It is the reader's Comment—the Editor's due.

Type out 100 words in three paragraphs. Make the first your idea, the second your argument, the third your conclusion—preferably a constructive conclusion.

Then post it and forget about it. . . anyway, it hasn't done you any harm.

Writing to the Press is—among other things—a splendid spiritual aperient. Men have starved off suicide by a useful habit like that.

TO-DAY IN THE PAST

A Poet Was Born At Stratford

By Sir Cedric
Hardwicke

SHAKESPEARE is not only our greatest dramatist and poet; he is also our greatest national stock joke. Even in these days, when we appear to be losing our sense of humour, the comic artist and the music hall comedian can always be certain of a laugh by calling on the name of Shakespeare, and it is only in the schoolroom and the cocktail bar that they will not laugh in the first of those two centres of learning because the literature hour is no time for levity, and in the second because they dare not.

The snobbery which forbids any Bright Young Person from admitting the slightest knowledge of or interest in Shakespeare, derives from the school days—those days when even the child attains a hatred of him so implacable that it might have been mortal blow had his works been set in the curriculum as holiday tasks. The ill-effects of pedagogues have made the name of Shakespeare a byword and to whose doleful lot it fell to take the "Henry V." and "Julius Caesar" schools recognise no other Shakespearean plays, so far as I have ever been able to discover—was handing on a vendetta bequeathed to him in turn by the English masters of his own childhood days.

"Studying Shakespearean plays," analysing it, dissecting it, writing notes about it, for all the world as if we were witnesses at an autopsy, was only one of the ways in which Shakespeare was made detestable to us, and one of the mildest ways at that. He was inflicted on us as "repetition," as an "impot," and, even worse, as a holiday task. As regards the latter form of pedagogical cruelty there could be no surer way of making the very name of Shakespeare stink in the nostrils of schoolboys for ever; even Edgar Wallace himself could have been struck a well-merited mortal blow had his works been set in the curriculum as holiday tasks. but showmen, should have the handling of Shakespeare, the honour of introducing him to the younger generation. If Shakespeare is to be put where he belongs—that is, in the hearts of the English people—he must be treated as he himself would wish to be treated, as an entertainer, not as a task master, a giver of pleasure, not a drier out of penances.

The coming of the talkies has carried out this suggestion. The filming of the plays of Shakespeare as "silents" is indeed, like "Hamlet" without the Prince of Denmark, since the poetry and not the spectacle is the aim; but modern apparatus and modern technique in the film studios have greatly simplified the problems that filming such works as Shakespeare's plays present. Without going too deeply into technicalities it can be mentioned, for instance, that by means of the "Dunning process" by which figures can be superimposed upon any setting—and other "tricks of the trade" the production of such films in a manner acceptable to modern youth does not present any great difficulty or entail any huge expense.

The Film and Drama

The film as an educative force is only just beginning to be appreciated. The tradition of the manual and the copy-book dies hard. Nevertheless, enlightened educationists throughout the country are optimistic for the future, and especially in the inculcating of a love of the arts, can the film be of paramount value. In America, Germany, and Italy organisations for the production of films of educative value are in being, and in Germany and Italy receive considerable help from the State. In Germany, for instance, the Entertainment Tax is remitted at cinemas where such films are shown.

Admittedly the sponsors of this movement will have to proceed cautiously, and my opinion is that the film for use in the schools should be regarded as quite apart from that intended for universal consumption at the cinemas. The matter must be said the box office must receive its due share of attention in the latter case, and the public can be very suspicious of "teaching films." In the public's case the showing of such films of say, the plays of Shakespeare, might easily tend to increase the distrust which such plays already breed in the public mind to-day.

The children, however, are not influenced in their likes and dislikes by the factors that govern box office receipts, and it may well be that the very things which would bore the adult, film-rated public, would prove the greatest attraction to the younger audiences. Films will have to be very carefully prepared, and by those who not only love Shakespeare, but understand him.

I am sure that by such means a genuine appreciation of Shakespeare could be coupled with an enlightened view of many aspects of history, and I can imagine the delight of the child in seeing, say, Cardinal Wolsey, a real, moving entity rather than a boring name or a date in a book, in discovering that Shakespeare could be funny and that he is full of robust humour and comic cross-talk, and that his dramatic scenes can be far "creepier" than any modern "thriller." Then will Shakespeare come to life again and rise from the degradation of boredom and dogma to which he has been sunk, to his just position as a glorious, beloved figure in our national consciousness.

Put-Shakespeare-Where He Belongs

What can be done to restore Shakespeare to his proper place, to make him not only interesting but lovable to his own people? I believe we can do this by wresting him from the hands of the schoolmasters and restoring him to his friends—the artists and the actors. Not teachers of English, if we were witnesses at an autopsy, was only one of the ways in which Shakespeare was made detestable to us, and one of the mildest ways at that. He was inflicted on us as "repetition," as an "impot," and, even worse, as a holiday task. As regards the latter form of pedagogical cruelty there could be no surer way of making the very name of Shakespeare stink in the nostrils of schoolboys for ever; even Edgar Wallace himself could have been struck a well-merited mortal blow had his works been set in the curriculum as holiday tasks. The ill-effects of pedagogues have made the name of Shakespeare a byword and to whose doleful lot it fell to take the "Henry V." and "Julius Caesar" schools recognise no other Shakespearean plays, so far as I have ever been able to discover—was handing on a vendetta bequeathed to him in turn by the English masters of his own childhood days.

"Studying Shakespearean plays," analysing it, dissecting it, writing notes about it, for all the world as if we were witnesses at an autopsy, was only one of the ways in which

15 MEN REMAKING EUROPE

Personalities Of The League Of Nations Council

"JUDGES" OF GERMANY AND ITALY

The Diplomats Who Decide The Fate of The World

EUROPE'S history may be remade next week when the Council of the League of Nations meets to consider the position created by Germany's remilitarisation of the Rhine and Italy's refusal to accept the League terms for a peaceful settlement of the Italo-Ethiopian war.

Personalities composing the Council are here described by a special correspondent who has attended many of its meetings.

Dominating the Council table will be M. Pierre-Etienne Flandin, 6-ft. tall French Foreign Secretary.

A lawyer by profession, M. Flandin is best known among his wide circle of English friends for his frequent coming to England to shoot—as a keen sportsman.

When Finance Minister he went to Britain once to combine politics with sport. Arriving at Dover he found he had forgotten to obtain a permit to bring in his double-barrelled sports gun.

EFFICIENCY

He explained that he was the French Finance Minister, but the British Customs official was doubtful and telephoned the Foreign Office.

"He says he's the French Finance Minister," said the Customs official. "Well," replied the official on duty, "if he says he is, you'd better let him go in."

Rivaling M. Flandin in public interest is M. Maxim Litvinov.

M. Flandin Signor Grandi.

the Foreign Minister of France's new ally, Soviet Russia. M. Litvinov, now one of the most persuasive examples of the "Geneva atmosphere," was at one time a picturesque revolutionary living an obscure life in the East End of London.

ENGLISH WIFE

Round-faced and bespectacled, and invariably wearing a wide-brimmed soft hat, he has the look of a benign cleric. He speaks English fluently, if with a marked accent.

He is the only Soviet Commissioner in London with an English wife. While in London he married Miss Ivy Low, who is now regarded as "the first lady of Soviet Russia" at all diplomatic entertainments in Moscow.

The last League Council meeting gave to Colonel Beck, the Polish Foreign Minister, a long-cherished opportunity of coming to London.

Colonel Beck is the man who, more than any other, has been responsible for diverting Polish foreign policy away from Paris towards Berlin. He is the principal architect of the German-Polish Pact.

M. Titulescu, Rumanian Foreign Minister, who also speaks for the Little Entente (Rumania, Czechoslovakia, and Yugoslavia), has for years been one of the most picturesque League personalities.

THE PROFESSOR

Of M. Titulescu it may be said that his facial appearance is Mongolian, his clothes Saville-row, and his mind Parisian.

Spain's delegate is Senor Barcia, the Foreign Minister. But better known to his country is his assistant, Professor Madragarza, who, following a number of years in charge of the League Disarmament Section, accepted a professorship at Oxford.

He is small, dark, vivacious, and very witty.

Of Portugal's two delegates, Senor Monteiro and Senor Vasconcellos, the former is Foreign Minister and the latter has come into prominence as the chairman of the League Sanctions Committee, where he has built up for himself a reputation for the calmness and efficiency with which he can control a stormy meeting.

M. Van Zeeland. M. Litvinov.

THE PRESIDENT

He is also a great connoisseur of the arts. Turkey's representative, M. M. Tewfik Armas, better known before Mustafa Kemal, the Turkish Dictator, changed all Turkish names, as Tewfik Rashed Bey, played a large part in promoting the Balkan bloc and the closer relations between Turkey and Russia. Like M. Litvinov, he is of Jewish origin.

Other delegates to the Council include M. Van Zeeland, the Belgian Foreign Minister, who, as the representative of the country most affected by the Rhineland coup, is having an important influence upon the decisions of the League Powers; Senor Edwards, the Chilean Ambassador; Senor Ruiz Guinazu, the permanent Argentinian delegate to the League; Dr. Munch, Danish Foreign Minister; and Senor Zaldumbide, the Foreign Minister of Ecuador.

Last, but not least, Mr. Bruce, the Australian High Commissioner, has brought to the Presidency of the Council an atmosphere of Dominion common sense and fair-mindedness.

His Job Was Restoring History

DID IT FOR HALF A CENTURY

After 54 years of service Mr. W. J. Clark, foreman of the works at Lincoln's Inn, is retiring with a pension of £5 a week and a gratuity of £400.

For centuries it has been the tradition of the Inn to employ their own permanent staff of workmen about their buildings.

Mr. Clark went to the Inn in 1882 as a lad of 16 to work as an "improver" under his father, who was foreman. He stepped into his father's shoes in 1914.

£25,000 TASK

In November, 1928, he was a proud man, for he had completed the task of restoring the beautiful fifteenth century Hall of the Inn. The restoration cost £25,000 and took five years. Only hand work was used as in the days of the original builders 450 years ago.

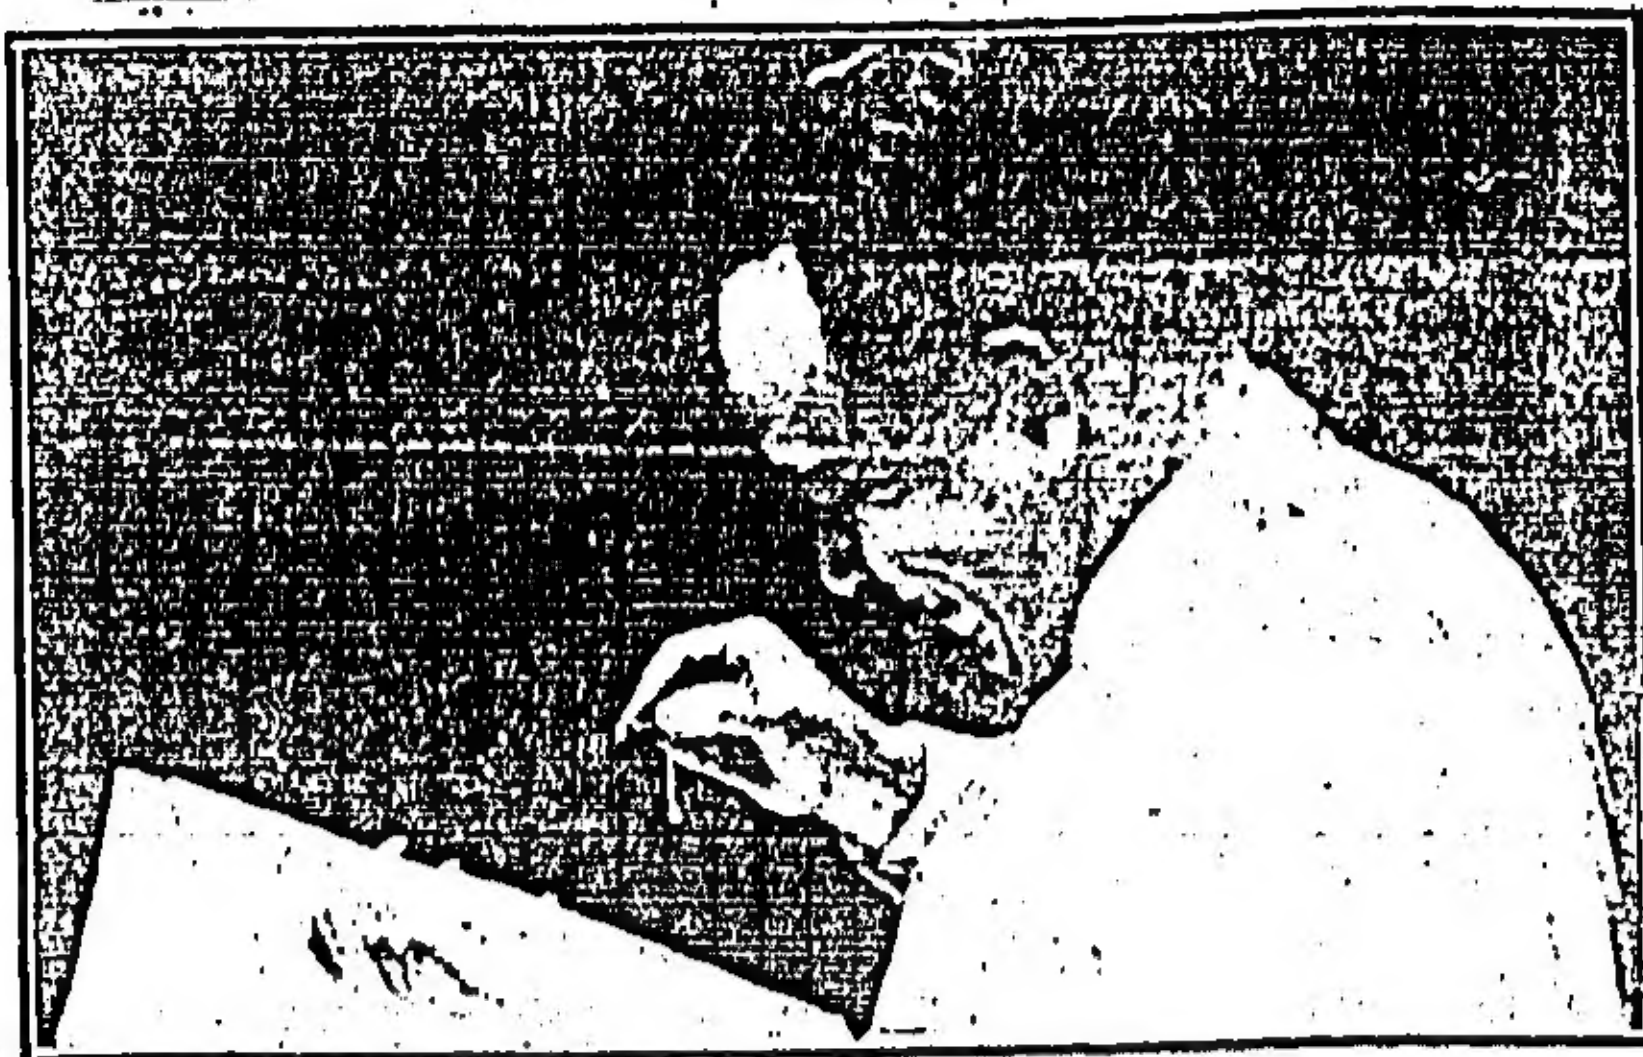

Five benches sat down with the Inn workmen to supper the night of the opening. Each workman was given 45s. and Mr. Clark was presented with a £100 cheque.

Another of Mr. Clark's big jobs was repairing the havoc wrought by German bombs in 1915 and 1918, when 60 ceilings came down and hundreds of panes of glass were broken.

Mr. Clark thinks the modern woman would do well to revive "the velvet rage" of the '80's. British manufacturers had just introduced coloured velvet then.

"The ladies looked lovely in their velvet gowns and bonnets in all the colours of the rainbow," he said.

Shaw Masters Situation Facing Hollywood Jester

Los Angeles, Apr. 10.

C. Bernard Shaw and Mrs. Shaw arriving on their world tour, sought out a quiet spot in a hotel dining room.

An earnest young man popped up before the surprised Mr. Shaw, and snapped:

ISOLATION WINS NEWSPAPER TEST VOTE

SHOULD BRITAIN STAND ALOOF FROM THE LORCA QUARREL, SUPPORTING NEITHER FRANCE NOR GERMANY?

The London Daily Express asked 25,000 people that question. They were chosen from all classes of the community, from men and women, young and old, from people who live in the south of England, in the north, in Scotland and Wales.

This is the new "Daily Express" system of testing the voice of the people. It gives to the world in clear, concise form the true measure of public opinion on vital issues of the day.

The answer which the people gave is a striking majority for isolation.

The figures are: For standing aloof . . . 46.8 p.c. Against . . . 39.3 p.c. Uncertain . . . 13.9 p.c.

If all the uncertain votes were added to those against isolation, there would still be about one in every two persons in favour of Britain keeping out of the present dispute.

Sanctions

The second question the Daily Express asked was: Should Britain support France in her protest against Germany's repudiation of Locarno by joining France in instituting:

(a) Economic or financial sanctions against Germany? (b) Military sanctions, if necessary?

The answer is, No! The figures are: Against economic or financial sanctions 65.3 p.c. In favour . . . 21.0 p.c. Uncertain . . . 12.7 p.c.

Against military sanctions 67.7 p.c. In favour . . . 18.1 p.c. Uncertain . . . 14.2 p.c.

Now, notice that many more voted against sanctions, about 67 per cent., than the number that voted for isolation, 46.8 per cent. Why? The reason is that many who oppose sanctions against Germany for occupying what they describe as "her own territory, after all" would still be in favour of intervening if Germany proceeded to attack France.

The largest vote for isolation is in Wales, 53.9 per cent.

Yet the vote against sanctions there is not so large as elsewhere. It shows that in Wales public opinion is fairly solidly aligned in two definite camps. On one side, are those that say, No sanctions! And no intervention in Europe of any kind!

On the other side are those that say, Yes, sanctions, economic (20.5 per cent.) and military (23.1 per cent.), and full participation in Europe (33.3 per cent.).

The largest vote against isolation is in the south of England—39.4 per cent. The largest vote against sanctions of either kind is in the north of England—71.1 per cent. against economic sanctions, 72.3 per cent. against military sanctions. The north seems to know its mind best in all questions, for there is the smallest percentage of "uncertains," an average of 12 per cent.

"I'm Timothy Gluttspeigel—reporter from a Hollywood film paper—got to get an interview from you."

"I saw all the reporters I'm going to see down at the train," Mr. Shaw said.

"But that was old stuff you gave them—you only repeat yourself—"

"What—what, why you—"

"I've got to get this interview. My paper will fire me if I don't."

"What business of mine is it if you get fired? Now we're about to have lunch—"

"Thanks, I'm not hungry."

"Nobody asked you to eat."

"What's this about these English producers making star raids on our Hollywood talent?" the interviewer demanded. "Where'd they get the money—did the English Government subsidize the English studios?"

"Why do American editors persist in misusing the word subsidize?" Mr. Shaw interjected.

"What about persecution in Mexico?" the reporter then asked.

"I didn't know there was any."

"You ought to keep up with current events better than that," Mr. Shaw dropped his fork.

"I make current events," he explained. "Do you realize I've given you the longest interview I've given in months? And naturally, you'll go and add something to it in your paper."

"Ever hear of Virge Barnett?" asked the young man.

"Oh, you mean that—that ribber—that insulter? Yes."

"Well, meet him."

Mr. Shaw held up his hands and laughed heartily. He shook hands with Hollywood's premier joker.

New Colours For British Submarines

London, Apr. 20.

The British Admiralty, after several years of experimenting, has decided to paint its submarines in different colours to "match" the seas where they serve.

The main purpose of the "protective colouring" is to make the undersea craft invisible to low flying airplanes when submerged.

For some time it was the theory of naval experts that grey-green would prove the best colour, regardless of what sea a submarine might be cruising in. But the hues of the oceans vary to such an extent that new shades had to be added.

British submarines operating in the Atlantic ocean, for instance, will remain grey-green but those stationed in the Mediterranean will be royal blue. Curiously, those in the Red Sea will be painted black.

Experiments in protective colouring were being carried out when the British submarine M-1 disappeared in 1925. She was painted a pale green colour and it was a trace of this paint, found on the bow of a Scandinavian steamer when she docked in home port several weeks afterward that finally established the fate of the M-1.

Tranmere's Defeat

MOTHERWELL LOSE

London, Apr. 22. The startling defeat of Tranmere by York City in the northern section of the third division was the feature of to-day's big list of English Football League matches.

Tranmere are in trouble for promotion, but this reverse has seriously jeopardised their chances, and Chesterfield now require but three points from three matches to be certain of the championship. Tranmere, with the same number of games played as three points, in arrears of the leaders.

Sunderland came a cropper at Leeds, the United winning by three clear goals, while Chelsea gained a valuable point from Portsmouth and have made themselves safe from relegation.

Motherwell were unexpectedly beaten on their own ground by Dunfermline, while Rangers were held to a draw by Hearts, both results materially helping Celtic in their quest for the title.

Highlander, who became a surprising last-minute favourite at 11 to 4, never showed up at any stage in the race, which was run in cold, but sunny weather.—Reuter.

AND WIN COLONY DOUBLES CROWN

Fighting Finish

(By "Veritas")

Tsui Wai-pui and Tsui Yun-pui beat E. C. Fincher and W. C. Hung 6-8, 7-5, 2-6, 6-4, 6-2.

It is hardly overstating the case to say that a baseline linesman's blunder led directly to the defeat of Fincher and Hung in this tremendously tense and often dramatic Colony championship final on the stand court yesterday.

Certainly the decline and fall of the losers could be traced back to that point. It occurred in the fourth set with Fincher and Hung, leading by two sets to one and two games to one in Tsui Wai-pui's service. The receivers had game point for a three-one lead, which at that time would almost assuredly have sent them out winners in the fourth set.

Tsui brothers were at the net and there was an exchange of lobs, volleys and counter drives. The ball was volleyed and plainly cleared the baseline by several inches. But the stroke was given as good, and the Tsuis went on to win the game, then the set, and finally the match against a very disgruntled couple.

Hung undoubtedly allowed the incident to upset him more than it should, but a temporary collapse at such a vital stage of a match is easily understandable; unfortunately with one's mental attitude to the game so vastly changed, it is not so easy to recover equilibrium.

This is not to gainsay the merit of the Tsui brothers' victory. All honour is due to them for their magnificent recovery at a time when they certainly had their tails between their legs. Fincher and Hung still had opportunities of winning the match, but it must be said that from that point onwards they were made to play second fiddle.

Apart from this point, which, at least, felt to be an error on the part of the linesman, general dissatisfaction was caused by the manner in which one of the line officials gave his decision. Several times fault services were called after the players had exchanged three and four strokes. This contributed nothing towards the smooth functioning of the match and more than once disconcerted all four players.

CONCERNING THE MATCH

Concerning the match one can say that it was very entertaining, and boasting phases of excellent tennis. One marked feature was the absence of driving and the constant volleying bouts with all four players up at the net. There was some astonishingly clever volleying and equally as effective lobbing.

Fincher, until midway through the fourth set, was the best player on view, seldom making a mistake and constantly discovering gaps in the opposition with timely volleys down the middle of the court. It was after the Tsuis had taken a lead in the fourth set that Fincher began to lose his touch and in the final stanza was making all sorts of mistakes, in particular with overhead smashes.

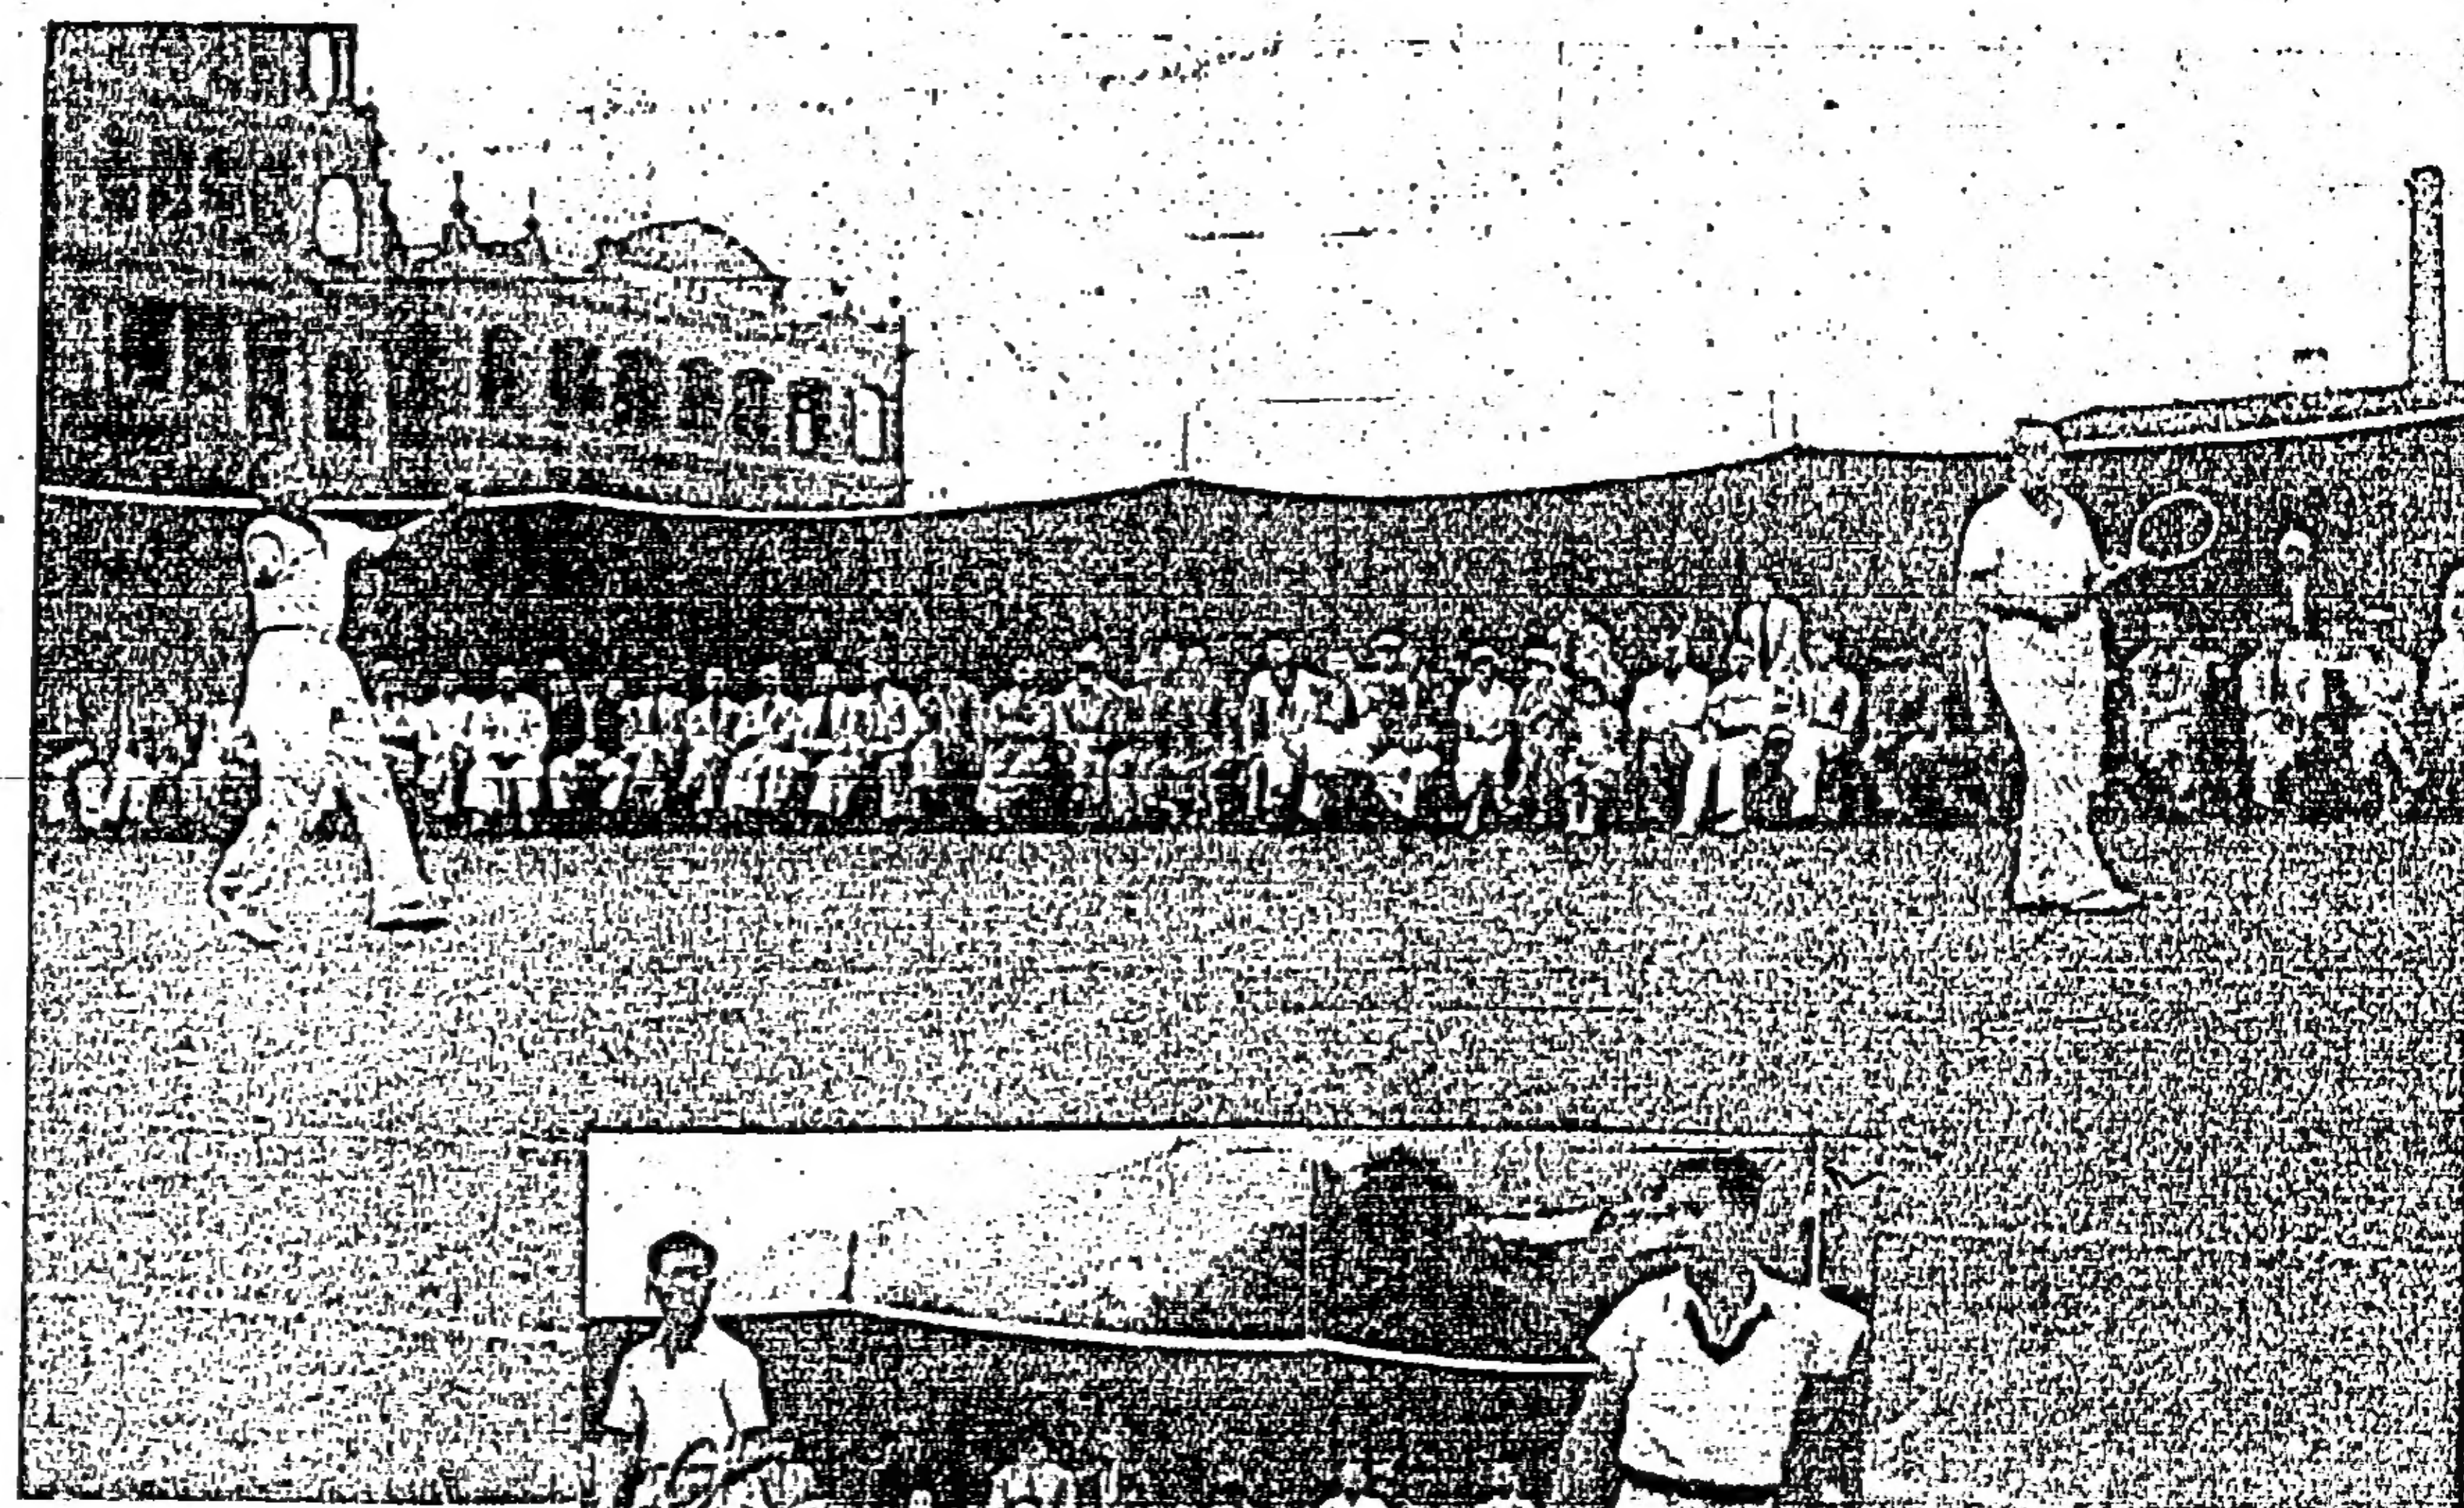

For three sets the K.C.C. pair played slightly the better tennis. They should have won the second as well as the first set, but Hung dropped his service at a critical stage after he and Fincher had been within two points of the set on Tsui Wai-pui's service. However, they rallied strongly in the third set and obtained an early break-through which they consolidated after Tsui Yun-pui had pulled them back to 4-2, by again winning Wai-pui's delivery.

EXUBERANT TENNIS

By this time the K.C.C. couple were playing exuberant tennis and had the Chinese strictly on the defensive. Hung was continually scoring with some timely volleys and very determined smashes. Only off the ground did he show any distinct weakness. Then came the incident which completely undermined his confidence and brought about such a rapid change of fortune.

It was the Tsui's turn to take the initiative, and they merit full marks for the manner in which they seized the opportunity. Tsui Yun-pui, who had been playing steadily throughout (much more so than his brother) was galvanised into assertive action, scoring time and again with neat

WILL HE NEVER WIN IT?

Yesterday Teddy Fincher played in his fourth Colony doubles tennis championship final in five years. But the title still eludes him. Twice before he has figured in five set matches, on both occasions enjoying advantages as he did yesterday with W. C. Hung.

But still Teddy can't win a Colony championship, and those who believe in fate say he never will. His previous three gallant failures were with L. Goldman and they were in successive years 1932, 33, 34.

Yesterday was Hung's second final in succession. Last year he and Ho Ka-lau lost to the Rumjahn cousins.

So Far This Year—

Tsui Wai-pui has won four tennis titles. He is now holder of the two Colony championships, and recently he retained the Chinese Recreation Club singles crown and with his brother, Tsui Yun-pui, won the club's doubles championship.

What he most desires now is to figure in a winning interport team against Shanghai.

CRICKET BAT TREES ARE DYING

English Willows Ravished By Disease

London. In a last effort to save from extinction what was up to quite recently a flourishing Essex industry, the Essex County Council have sent out an S.O.S. enlisting the help of all who live in the rural areas of the county.

For generations Essex has been the home of the cricket bat willow growing industry. Up to last year, 90 per cent of the trees needed for the manufacture of English cricket bats made in this country, sets have been sent from Essex to Australia, New Zealand and India, in fact to all parts where cricket is played.

Now this industry is threatened with extinction in a season or two unless the rapidly spreading ravages of the watermark disease are overcome. Hundreds of trees nearing maturity are badly affected, particularly in the valleys of the Blackwater and Colne. The losses to Essex growers during the past year are estimated at £50,000.

The cause is a microbe or bacterium, which has been definitely isolated. What is not definitely known yet is how this bacterium is carried from tree to tree and investigations are proceeding in an attempt to discover this.

A team race held yesterday between the Royal Artillery and the Royal Engineers was won by the former by three points.

CHANGES AHEAD FOR SQUASH

Tests with New Ball and Racket

Signs have not been wanting recently that the game of squash is still in a state of evolution, and that important changes in the rules and apparatus may be made between now and the beginning of next season.

International problems are occupying the attention of the S.R.A. The Bath Club Cup may be decided in three games per match instead of five experiments are being made officially with a new ball and with a suitable racket for it.

The new ball is designed to assist the work of the S.R.A. in bringing the rules of the U.S.A., Canada, and Great Britain into alignment, so that one country can meet another upon common ground instead of having to learn, so to speak, a different language for international matches and tours. The racket will also assist in the solution of this problem. In fact, the progress of the S.R.A. in this connection has been so rapid that a meeting is about to be called of the Executive Committee to discuss the application of an international code of rules and the standardisation of a new ball and racket.

AN OPPORTUNE SUGGESTION

At this opportune moment a public expression of opinion which may contribute a great deal to the advancement of an international code of rules, and at the same time form a line of approach to the simplification of our domestic problems, has been made by Mr. S. M. Toynce, affectionately known as the "Father of Northern Squash."

At the prize distribution at the North of England Women's Championship he advocated a change to the American system of scoring, i.e., fifteen up and every point won to add one to a player's score.

It will be clear why the United States had no patience with the apparently laborious and illogical method of having to waste a point to obtain "hand in." They have no veneration for rackets proper, from which this method has descended to us. In that game its chief purpose is to obviate the winning of games on service or at least to make it more difficult. In squash it is much more difficult, to put it mildly, to score service as in rackets. Moreover, as squash, in form, following and practice, continues more violently to repudiate its ancestor, and as rackets players mostly regard it as nothing but a heretical offshoot of their game, there seems no reason to perpetuate such a method on sentimental grounds.

DUAL PURPOSE
So much for the negative side of the "hand in" and "hand out" system and now for the positive side of Mr. Toynce's suggestion. Internationally, it would enable a big advance to be made in one stride towards universality; domestically, it might go a long way towards solving the problem raised by the Bath Club Cup players—that the game has become too strenuous to make it either a wise means to exercise or an enjoyable pastime. It is therefore worthy of the most careful consideration by all followers of the game.

If it is to general advantage to make the change the international side of the question can be taken as settled. It is not one of those changes that can be dismissed on the grounds that it would sacrifice the British game to the transient requirements of an encounter between this country and U.S.A. or Canada. It appears on the surface, at least, to have the merit of shortening the game and restricting it to essentials.

No one wishes to see squash reduced to the category of a parlour game, but the Bath Club Cup players' complaint is only the echo of a wider (Continued on Page 9)

FOOTBALL

TWO LEAGUE MATCHES

RECREIO HELD TO A DRAW

WELL CONTESTED GAMES

Two first division league football matches were played yesterday, both resulting in a draw with an aggregate of four goals.

Kowloon performed exceptionally well to take a point from Club de Recreio. They owed a great deal to Boyes who played a superb game in goal. It was therefore a pity that a misunderstanding between Boyes and Everett should have led directly to Recreio's equaliser. Everett tapped the ball back to the goalkeeper, but he was unprepared and the ball scraped by the upright for a corner. From the place kick Bernie Gosano scored with a first time shot.

This was in the closing stages. Earlier on both goals have experienced narrow escapes. Forward lines were enterprising in midfield, but were apt to lose the confidence of the defence. Recreio were the more polished team, but Kowloon played with rare spirit and fully held their own.

A goalless first half was a fair reflection of the exchanges, but it came as some surprise when G. White broke away for Kowloon and got clean through for goal. But he was tripped in the penalty area, and, taking the kick himself, sent Kowloon ahead. The equaliser came late in the game, but it was deserved.

Gosano among the forwards and Beltrao at centre-half shone for the Portuguese, while Kowloon were very well served by G. White in the attack, Bliss as pivot and Boyes in goal.

SOLDIERS PLAY A DRAW

Royal Ulsters And East Lancs.

Royal Ulsters and East Lancshires shared the spoils in a fast and entertaining match on the Chatham Road ground. The Ulsters faced a goal deficit at half time, but they rallied strongly and were full marks for their equaliser which came five minutes after the restart.

There were some surprises in the East Lancs' line-up, Steele, usually left back, figuring at inside left. The experiment was not a tremendous success. Positional changes were also made throughout the game. Ridings being the only man to retain his normal position.

Sandford was easily the pick of the forwards and Lawton the outstanding half back. Gorman has played much better games, but it must be confessed that he was out of position.

Irwin and Doherty constituted a smart right wing for the Rifles and most of the attacks came from this flank. Coyle was a lively half back, though rather severe in his tackling. Sandford gave the East Lancs a first half lead, but Ulster Rifles came back strongly and Ferguson recorded the equaliser with a smart header from Irwin's ideal centre.

ARE NEW SWIMMING RULES NEEDED?

Japanese Minister's Ideas Meet With Approval

Tokyo, Apr. 20.

In addition to being known as the sharp-tongued spokesman of the Japanese Foreign Office, Mr. Giji Amari to-day loomed as a potential reformer of the rules in aquatic competition. In a modern version of the old adage that a prophet often goes unnoticed among his own people, Mr. Amari to-day found that he had been entangled into the headlines of American sports magazines when the same idea, written and printed by a Japanese publication under his name, had failed to arouse even the mildest interest.

The story goes back to the invasion of Japan by American swimmers last year. Mr. Amari, who in his more limber days was an adept follower of the Kwanka School of Japanese swimming, went and watched the contests. It struck him, so he says in his article, that the tall Americans were at an advantage when competing against his short, stocky countrymen both at the start and at the turn in the tanks.

Thereupon, he suggested that future swimming races should start with the competitors in the water, away from walls that enable them to spring into action, and that turns should be made around buoys, again away from the sides of the tank so that the present practice of pushing against the walls with their feet would be eliminated. The idea, American magazines indicate, has met with the approval of experts in the United States.

Baseline Decision Affects Tennis Match

placements. Tsui-pui also regained his courage which had been perceptibly waning and the two strode on to a magnificent victory.

After snatching the fourth set in the tenth game, they monopolized the court to take a five-minute lead in the final set. It was a startling reversal of fortune. But Fincher and Hung revealed grand fighting resources, and after holding Fincher's service, broke through Tsui Wal-pui's A fine lob which only just cleared the baseline gave the Chinese the winning point for the title.

There was a hint of over-confidence in Tsui Wal-pui's earlier play, and although he was conspicuous for a number of brilliant shots, it was noticeable that he was more liable to errors than his brother. Fincher and Hung fairly naturally concentrated on the younger Tsui, but this served only to stiffen his game. He wasn't able to stop the K.C.C. couple from three sets, but when later the time came for offensive tactics, his strokes showed themselves to be in perfect working order. Yun-pui served magnificently, not once permitting a break-through.

ON THE WHOLE—EXCEEDINGLY WELL

On the whole Hung played exceedingly well. He was more effective at the net from the base. Some of his forehand drives were atrocious and stronger feeling in less exalted circles that the game, as it now stands with the slower ball, is fundamentally wrong because it has become too much like hard labour for the player no longer in the full vigour of youth. It has been noticed, too, in some of this season's championships that even the fittest players of the younger generation have found it nothing of a physical ordeal.

Mr. Thorne has a little better and equally good reasons for advocating it. He says:

"By the English method, the published score sheet does not represent the merit of the loser. Take an extreme example. X beat Y 9-1, although X scored 100 points to Y's 51. X beats Z 9-0, although Z may have not scored a single ace. To the reader a game lasting, say, 20 minutes, and one lasting, say, 3 minutes, appear to be the same. It shortens each game, and also prevents a player who is a little better normally than his opponent from playing lazily when serving, and it encourages a loser to go for the shots. Good serving would be encouraged, and some of the 'sloppy' services which we see would soon disappear. If only some competition would try it out, I am sure that American scoring would be popular."

LAST OF THE PAGANS

Adapted by CHARLES REED JONES from
the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture.

Lilleo and a group of Polynesian maidens are surprised at their morning bath by Taro and his Typee warriors. Some of the girls escape and speed back to the village of Tofoa to sound the alarm. Lilleo is captured by Mada. When the Tofoan warriors rally to repel the invaders, Mada is cut off from escape, and the Typee raiders embark without him. The search for Lilleo continues, but Mada, hiding behind a screen of water under a waterfall, manages to evade the searchers. Then, the darkness falls on the island, Mada steals a Tofoan canoe, and he and his unwilling captive set sail for Nukahiva, the island of the Typees.

Chapter III

Throughout the night Mada paddled on tirelessly. The bright stars of the heavens, mada row, guided him straightly over the dark waters toward his goal. Lilleo slept. Exhausted from the wearing events of the day before, he slumbered on until the bright sun of a new day awoke slowly out of the blue sea. Awakening, refreshed after her long sleep, Lilleo stared in confusion at the sky above her. Then, spying the friendly, smiling face of Mada, she turned on him savagely.

"Aine hoi!" she demanded angrily. "Where are you taking Lilleo?"

"To my island," he told her. Then smiling, he added, "Now, you are Mada's woman."

"No!" Lilleo was defiant.

"Yes!" she repeated, and she turned her back to him.

As she started out over the sea, Mada leaned forward. Taking his heavy necklace of shark's teeth from around his neck, he dropped it over her head.

"Yes," he said again, for in Typee, such a necklace worn by a woman, was a sign of betrothal.

Lilleo, angered anew, jumped to her feet. Pulling the necklace from her throat, she threw it at him. The flimsy craft rocked dangerously.

"Mada advanced to her, trying to steady the canoe. Lilleo tried to push him from her. She recoiled unsteadily for a moment, lost her balance, and pitched headlong into the water. Mada regained his seat and replaced the necklace about his neck. Watching her with amusement, he swung the canoe around and kept it within easy distance of her.

Instinctively, she turned from the canoe and struck out strongly away from him.

"Makool Makool Sharks!" Terror-stricken, she turned and struck out for the canoe.

"Yes?" he asked. "Mada's woman?"

"No!" Mada, deftly manipulating his paddle-spear, kept the boat just beyond her reach.

"Yes?" he demanded again.

"Yes! Yes!" she pleaded desperately.

Smiling happily, he reached down and lifted the frightened girl from the water. Safe in the canoe now, Lilleo's first thought was of the shark that had caused the alarm. But there was no shark, and Lilleo's ire flared anew as she knew that Mada had tricked her again.

Well, miserable, angry, Lilleo sulked. Again, Mada turned to his paddle and pushed on towards Nukahiva and home.

"Mada's village," he told her proudly, but she gave no sign that she had heard him. Then, as they neared the island, he told her again of the beauty and the plenty of the Typee homeland. And, again, after a manner of a Typee lover, he boasted of his own prowess as a hunter and a warrior, but Lilleo feigned sleep.

"Mada! Mada!" The shrill, excited cry came from a small boy on the beach.

"Time! Time!" Mada called the boy's name in reply.

Lilleo could no longer conceal her curiosity, and, as she sat up and peered towards the beach, she saw the youngster fleeing to the village to spread the glad news of Mada's return.

Fishermen dropped their tapa nets to be repaired another day; warriors put aside their mariri spears to sharpened later; youngsters forsake their games of javelin-throwing and spearguns; and women suspended their household tasks. Taro, their chief, led the way, as the whole village surged back to the beach to welcome Mada.

The crowd lined the shore, as Mada beached the canoe. Jumping into the shallow water, he caught Lilleo in his arms and swung her onto the dry, white sand. The villagers stepped back to clear a path for them, and, as Mada led Lilleo through the double file, the Typees joined in the song of welcome to the cabin who was to become one of them.

Taro stood at the end of the line. Mada raised his right hand high before him in salute. Taro ignored the greeting. He grasped Lilleo by the wrist and spun her around, facing him. The girl recoiled in terror, but Taro held her fast. Mada intervened angrily.

"Already, three women sit in Taro's house," he challenged. "This one is Mada's woman!"

"I am the chief!" Taro told him haughtily.

"The law of our tribe says that man who wins woman keeps woman," Mada insisted.

Taro reluctantly released his grip on Lilleo. She clung gratefully to Mada, as he took her arm and led her towards the village. The Typees closed in behind the couple, forming a procession to escort them to their home. The chief did not join the others. He stood apart, as they passed on, but his eye did not leave Lilleo until she had passed from his view.

Taro's determined interest in Lilleo was a source of amusement to two old warriors who knew their chief well.

"Is it that Mada has brought a woman for himself or for Taro?" one of them asked slyly, and they both laughed at his joke.

When Mada reached his own hut, his mother was standing at the doorway, waiting to greet him. Solemnly and reverently after the manner of the Typees, he approached her, and he brushed his cheek lightly against hers, as was the custom. They did not speak. The ritual of their greeting finished, Mada stepped aside so that his mother might welcome Lilleo. The older woman examined the captive critically, and, apparently, her scrutiny satisfied her, she said in all friendliness.

"This woman is not your daughter," Lilleo replied obstinately, and she turned away.

"But, Mada is my son," the mother continued, for she could not believe that any Tofoan would refuse him.

"This woman is not Mada's woman," Mada's mother understood now. She did not choose to argue with Lilleo. Instead, she nodded in sympathetic understanding.

"No, she is comely," she said significantly. "If she does not want Mada, other men wait."

Lilleo looked at the group around her that the older woman indicated. Younger men, fearing Mada's spear, had not dared to approach too closely. It was a group of old warriors, their dark, pinched skin emblazoned with hideous tatu-tatu, tatooings, that met her gaze. Instinctively, she recoiled from them, as she had recoiled from Taro a short time before.

Rehna, the mother, placed a sheltering arm around the girl's shoulder, and Lilleo smiled her gratitude.

"Enter, my daughter," Rehna invited. "Mada's mother makes you welcome."

Lilleo looked uncertainly from Rehna to Mada. She feared the ugly warriors who ogled her from the near distance, and she dared not remain among them without Mada's protection. On the other hand, according to the custom of her own people, the Tofoans, to enter the home of a warrior's mother was to acknowledge him as one's husband; and Lilleo was not yet ready to submit to her captor.

Again, Rehna's intuition stood her in good stead, for woman-like she knew the workings of this vahine's mind.

"Mada will go away," she assured her.

"Atta!" Mada objected. "Mada will go." "Mada will go away," Rehna repeated, and Mada, wisely, bowed deferentially.

Still, Lilleo was undecided. She wanted to trust him, but she feared trickery, for Mada had tricked her many times before. Then, suddenly, her mind was made up, for she saw Taro stalking towards them through the crowd. And Lilleo knew Taro was coming for her.

Without a word, she turned and fled into the house. Rehna turned and followed. A curtain of white tapa cloth dropped over the doorway.

Mada took his position before the hut, his back to the doorway. His paddle-spear in his right hand, he waited to meet his chief.

ANNUAL U.S. FLEET MANOEUVRES WILL EMPHASISE PANAMA CANAL PROTECTION

Washington, Apr. 21.
Protection of the Panama Canal by the United States' first line of defence will be emphasised by the annual fleet manoeuvres this spring off the west coast of Central America and in the Panama area.

Sixteen naval vessels will also visit South American west coast ports according to present plans just announced by the Navy Department.

Four cruisers under the command of Rear Admiral Thomas C. Hart will put in at Valparaiso, Chile, for a six-day visit. The cruisers will be the U.S.S. Chicago, the U.S.S. Houston, the U.S.S. Chester, and the U.S.S. Salt Lake City.

Six cruisers and six destroyers under the command of Rear Admiral Charles P. Snyder will visit Callao, Peru. The vessels will be the cruisers U. S. S. Louisville, U. S. S. New Orleans, U. S. S. San Francisco, U. S. S. Astoria, U. S. S. Minneapolis and the U. S. S. Tuscaloosa. The destroyers will include the U. S. S. Farragut, U. S. S. Aylwin, U. S. S. Dewey, U. S. S. Hull, U. S. S. Macdonough and the U. S. S. Worden.

The ships will be in port from May 28 to June 2.

According to Navy Department plans the United States fleet under the command of Admiral Joseph Mason Reeves, will leave West Coast bases the latter part of April. Upon the completion of manoeuvres about the end of May, it is probable that some units of the fleet will transit the Panama Canal and in accordance with the policy of the Navy Department of returning some ships to the east coast in alternate years opportunity will be given for individual units to visit northern ports in midsummer followed by visits to South Atlantic and gulf ports in late August and September. Return to the San Diego-San Pedro area will occur about mid-September.

The visits of United States vessels to South American ports will be the first since 1934 when the Tuscaloosa and the Ranger visited Montevideo, Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro in shake-down cruises. All permit arrangements with the countries to be visited this year were concluded before the official announcement was made.

The vital position which the Panama occupies in world trade during normal times is emphasized by the latest traffic figures just compiled for the year 1935. Total number of transits during that year numbered 5,052 for ocean traffic which was a slight decrease from 1934 transits. Total tolls collected during the year totalled $22,421,206.62.

In manoeuvring off the Panama Canal naval officials feel the Navy will be emphasizing once more that one of its chief functions is to protect the trade route vital both in times of peace and in times of war.

Approximately 115 vessels will participate in the spring Manoeuvres. These will be divided as follows: 15 battleships; 14 heavy cruisers; 9 light cruisers; 70 destroyers; 5 tenders; 4 aircraft carriers; and 6 submarines.

Princess Tries To Stop Film

Paris, April 18.
A PRINCESS is trying to prevent the showing in Paris of a French film portraying the unhappy love affair of her dead husband and "the other woman."

The Princess de Lonyay, daughter of King Leopold I. of Belgium, married the Archduke Rudolf of Austria in 1881, eight years before his tragic death.

The film, "Mayerling," is based on a novel of the same name telling of the love affair of the Archduke and the beautiful Marie de Sern.

The couple's association ended with a death-pact after the Emperor Francis Joseph had ordered the Archduke to end the association.

The Princess de Lonyay bases her present case on her objections to the part of herself played by an actress in the film.

The princess has already succeeded in getting the film banned in Belgium.—Exchange.

BATTLE OVER NEW TAX BILL

SHARP CLEAVAGE IN CONGRESS

REPUBLICANS UP IN ARMS

Washington, Apr. 22.
President F. D. Roosevelt's new Tax Bill, which was introduced into the House of Representatives yesterday, has raised a bitter controversy, portending a sharp congressional battle which will extend to the presidential campaign.

Leaders of the attack upon the measure stood their ground in spite of the President's renewed warning that passage of the bill is necessary to balance the ordinary budget.

Republicans are calling the bill a "foolish experiment and a face-saving gesture."

It is understood President Roosevelt made his position clear at a recent conference of Congress leaders yesterday.

It is estimated that the proposed taxes will yield $792,000,000 (U.S. currency) during the first year of their operation. Some authorities express the view that the revenue will be swelled by $800,000,000 to $850,000,000.

MINORITY REPORT

The Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, which considered the Tax Bill, have presented a minority report, indicating that some may be made a major campaign issue. They oppose the new taxes, they say, until the waste of public money is stopped.

They maintain the bill is unsound in principle and will undermine business stability. It is not designed, so much to raise revenue as it is to experiment along another New Deal avenue.

The Republicans warn against passage of such a measure in view of the fact that the public debt is rising at the rate of several billions of dollars yearly. No effort is being made to balance the budget, they complain, and federal credit is stretched to the limit. It is dangerous, they say, finally, to experiment with federal revenue at this time.—United Press.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

MARKET UPWARD YESTERDAY

New York, April 22.
Swan, Culbertson & Fritz Dow Jones' Summary of yesterday's market:—The market to-day was upward on moderate covering by short interests and the absence of further selling pressure. Trading was on the light side. Wide gains were recorded in a few issues on selective buying.

Most stocks on the List were up from fractions to two points. Steel shares were in demand early in the session, but later eased slightly. Automotive and motor-equipment stocks also advanced early in the day, but later declined slightly. Copper issues were firm. Stocks on the Curb Exchange were up fractions to two points. The turnover was the lightest for weeks. The market for bonds was steady.

Swan, Culbertson & Fritz Dow Jones' comment on 21/4 market:—The Tax Bill presented in the House of Representatives to-day is a more serious threat to complicated utility holdings company organizations than any legislation yet adopted. Chrysler Motor Company's first-quarter earnings are likely to be somewhat larger than last year. Most brokers say that there is no noticeable liquidation from Europe. There have been very few margin calls recently since most of the recent liquidation was voluntary. Wall Street is not bearish on the long-pull, but it apparently believes that a number of stocks have a safe run ahead in their business. There is some bullish talk regarding tobacco stocks.

S. C. & F. New York office cables: Stocks: This market responded to better sentiment in Wall Street and traders are now more optimistic. The Public Service of New Jersey earned $2.43 per share for the year ended March 31st, against $2.74 the previous year. The National Biscuit Company earned 39 cents per share for the March quarter against 22 cents during the corresponding quarter of last year. The Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation earned 59 cents per share as compared with 25 cents during the March quarter of last year.

Cotton: Official details regarding the weather show more beneficial rains in the West than were expected. This had an easing effect on new-crops. The Trade is buying largely near cotton. A heavy movement in Government stocks is expected in three weeks' time.

Wheat: Drought deterioration reports are increasing and no relief is forecast. There has been some heavy export of Canadian wheat.

Corn: Cash demand is active, whilst active receipts are light. This market will probably follow wheat in staging a further advance.

Rubber: Further liquidation, without any aggressive Trade support, was in evidence. We would suggest a continuation of a cautious attitude. Special—Average daily production of petroleum during the past week is estimated at 2,935,000 barrels, against 2,890,000 barrels the previous week. The Edison Electric Institute estimates electricity production at 1,915,000 k.w.h., an increase of 12.5 per cent. from the corresponding period of last year.

FEAR OF JAPANESE ATTACK

SOUTHERN CHINA RUMOURS

REBEL ARMY IN FUKIEN

(Special To "Telegraph")

Canton, Apr. 23.
Although the Sino-Japanese situation in South China is outwardly quiet, apprehension exists regarding the autonomy movement in South Fukien.

Reports that a Japanese fleet is shortly to visit Amoy are causing the fear to spread that Japanese aggression will be directed towards the southern Chinese areas.

Chinese newspapers report that a rebel army, known as the Western Fukien National Salvation Corps, has been organized under the leadership of the bandit chief, Li Liu-tiao, who is allegedly receiving arms from the Japanese.

Canton military authorities, meanwhile, have ordered reinforcements to the border to keep a close watch upon the situation in areas adjacent to Kwangtung.

It is said the rebel forces are very active in Chinkiang, Hulan and Chuanchow, where martial law has been proclaimed.—Reuter Special.

HONGKONG COLONIAL TREASURER

NEW APPOINTEE NOT YET NAMED

Expectations that Mr. A. A. Wright, until recently Secretary for Native Affairs in Fiji, would succeed Sir Thomas Southern as Colonial Secretary of Hongkong, will not be fulfilled.

A British Wireless message to hand this morning stated that Mr. Wright has been appointed Administrator of the Colonial Secretary of the Windward Islands.

It will be recalled that Mr. Wright's name was recently mentioned in connection with the vacancy in Hongkong caused by the pending departure of Sir Thomas Southern, on the latter's appointment as Governor of Gambria, and that enquiries made in London by Reuter resulted in an official confirmation of Mr. Wright's appointment to Hongkong.

On enquiry in official circles this morning, the Telegraph was informed that no definite decision had yet been reached regarding Sir Thomas Southern's successor.

CHINA'S ECONOMIC PROGRESS

HOPEFUL OUTLOOK IN LONDON

London, Apr. 23.
Commenting on an interview with Sir Frederick Leith-Ross on China finances, the Times City Editor says if his expectation, that China can manage her new currency system successfully, is realized, China would have taken a great step forward towards the enlargement of her economic activities and the improvement of her standard of living.

Capital for development, if China finances were better managed, would be freely provided.

No greater service to the cause of peace and the growth of the economic well-being of the East could be rendered than an agreement for the economic reconstruction and advancement of China, he says.

There is much of an encouraging nature in the picture of events in China as drawn by Mr. Stanley Dowell, in his report as chairman of the Hongkong-Shanghai Banking Corporation general meeting last February, the City Editor adds.—Reuter.

DEFENCE LINES STILL INTACT

ETHIOPIANS CLAIM ATTACKS REPULSED

PRINCE'S GUARDS FALL ON ITALIAN CAMP

Addis Ababa, Apr. 22.

There has been heavy fighting in the Warrahabu region, where the Crown Prince's Guards claim to have repulsed numerous attacks by the Italians.

At nightfall the Ethiopians worked their way by inaccessible goat tracks around a steep mountain side and suddenly fell upon the Italians' rear.

It is alleged the Italians broke and fled, leaving a portable wireless transmitter and many rifles behind them.

Yesterday the Italians made repeated assaults upon Tarmabir Mountain, along the sides of which the Dessiye-Addis Ababa road climbs, with innumerable hairpin turns. Three times, the Ethiopians claim, they repulsed Italian attacks, each time inflicting serious losses. The Italians finally abandoned the attempt to take the Ethiopian positions by storm.

The Crown Prince has arrived at Addis Ababa to help to organise the defences of the city.—Reuter.

Blow Up Roadway

Addis Ababa, Apr. 22.
It is reported that hundreds of Ethiopians are engaged in blowing up the main road from Dessiye at a place over 100 miles from the capital.

Italian bombers are continually interrupting the operations, but it is stated that the road communications have been successfully severed, while at other places mountain streams have been diverted to demolish the railway tracks.—Reuter Bulletin Service.

Tear Up Highway

Addis Ababa, Apr. 23.
In cover of rain and mist, their only protection from Italian bombers, thousands of Ethiopians have dynamited the Imperial Highway from Dessiye to the capital, by which Marshal Badoglio's legions are advancing to storm Addis Ababa.

Meanwhile, the Ethiopian warriors are desperately battling the Italian columns between Tarmabir and Shalameda, according to the Crown Prince, who has just returned to this city from the fighting front. His arrival belies reports from Dessiye that he had gone to that city to treat for peace with Marshal Badoglio.

Defence Preparations

A United Press correspondent at Tarmabir Pass witnessed the destruction of the highway by 1,500 Ethiopians, digging great trenches twelve feet deep to prevent the passage of tanks and trucks. They have diverted streams by dynamiting them and water is cascading across the road.

Warriors have erected machine-gun positions along the pass itself, while thousands are gathering in the Shalameda plain, where the final battle for the possession of Addis Ababa is expected to be fought.

The Crown Prince remains to direct operations and the Emperor, his mother declares, "I shall remain with my people until the end. We are still undefeated."

No-one knows, apparently, where the Emperor himself may be.—United Press.

PENALTIES INJURE ITALY

LEAGUE EXPERTS' FINDINGS

DEVASTATED TRADE

(Special To "Telegraph")

Geneva, Apr. 23.
A committee of financial and economic experts met here yesterday to oppose with their findings and adding machines the Italian Tanks, armoured cars and airplanes converging on Addis Ababa and Harar.

Members of the League of Nations Council, all but abandoning Ethiopia to its fate because of the system of collective security under the Covenant had failed in its great test, prepared to leave for home.

It was admitted there was no applicable means to prevent Italy from completing the conquest of its fellow League member.

Experts who must have were to examine statistics on the effects of the penalties imposed against Italy; and it was possible to tighten them. It was understood the experts would report that anti-Italian penalties had a devastating effect on Italy's foreign trade.

Mrs. BARTHOLOMEW FAILS IN CUSTODY ACTION

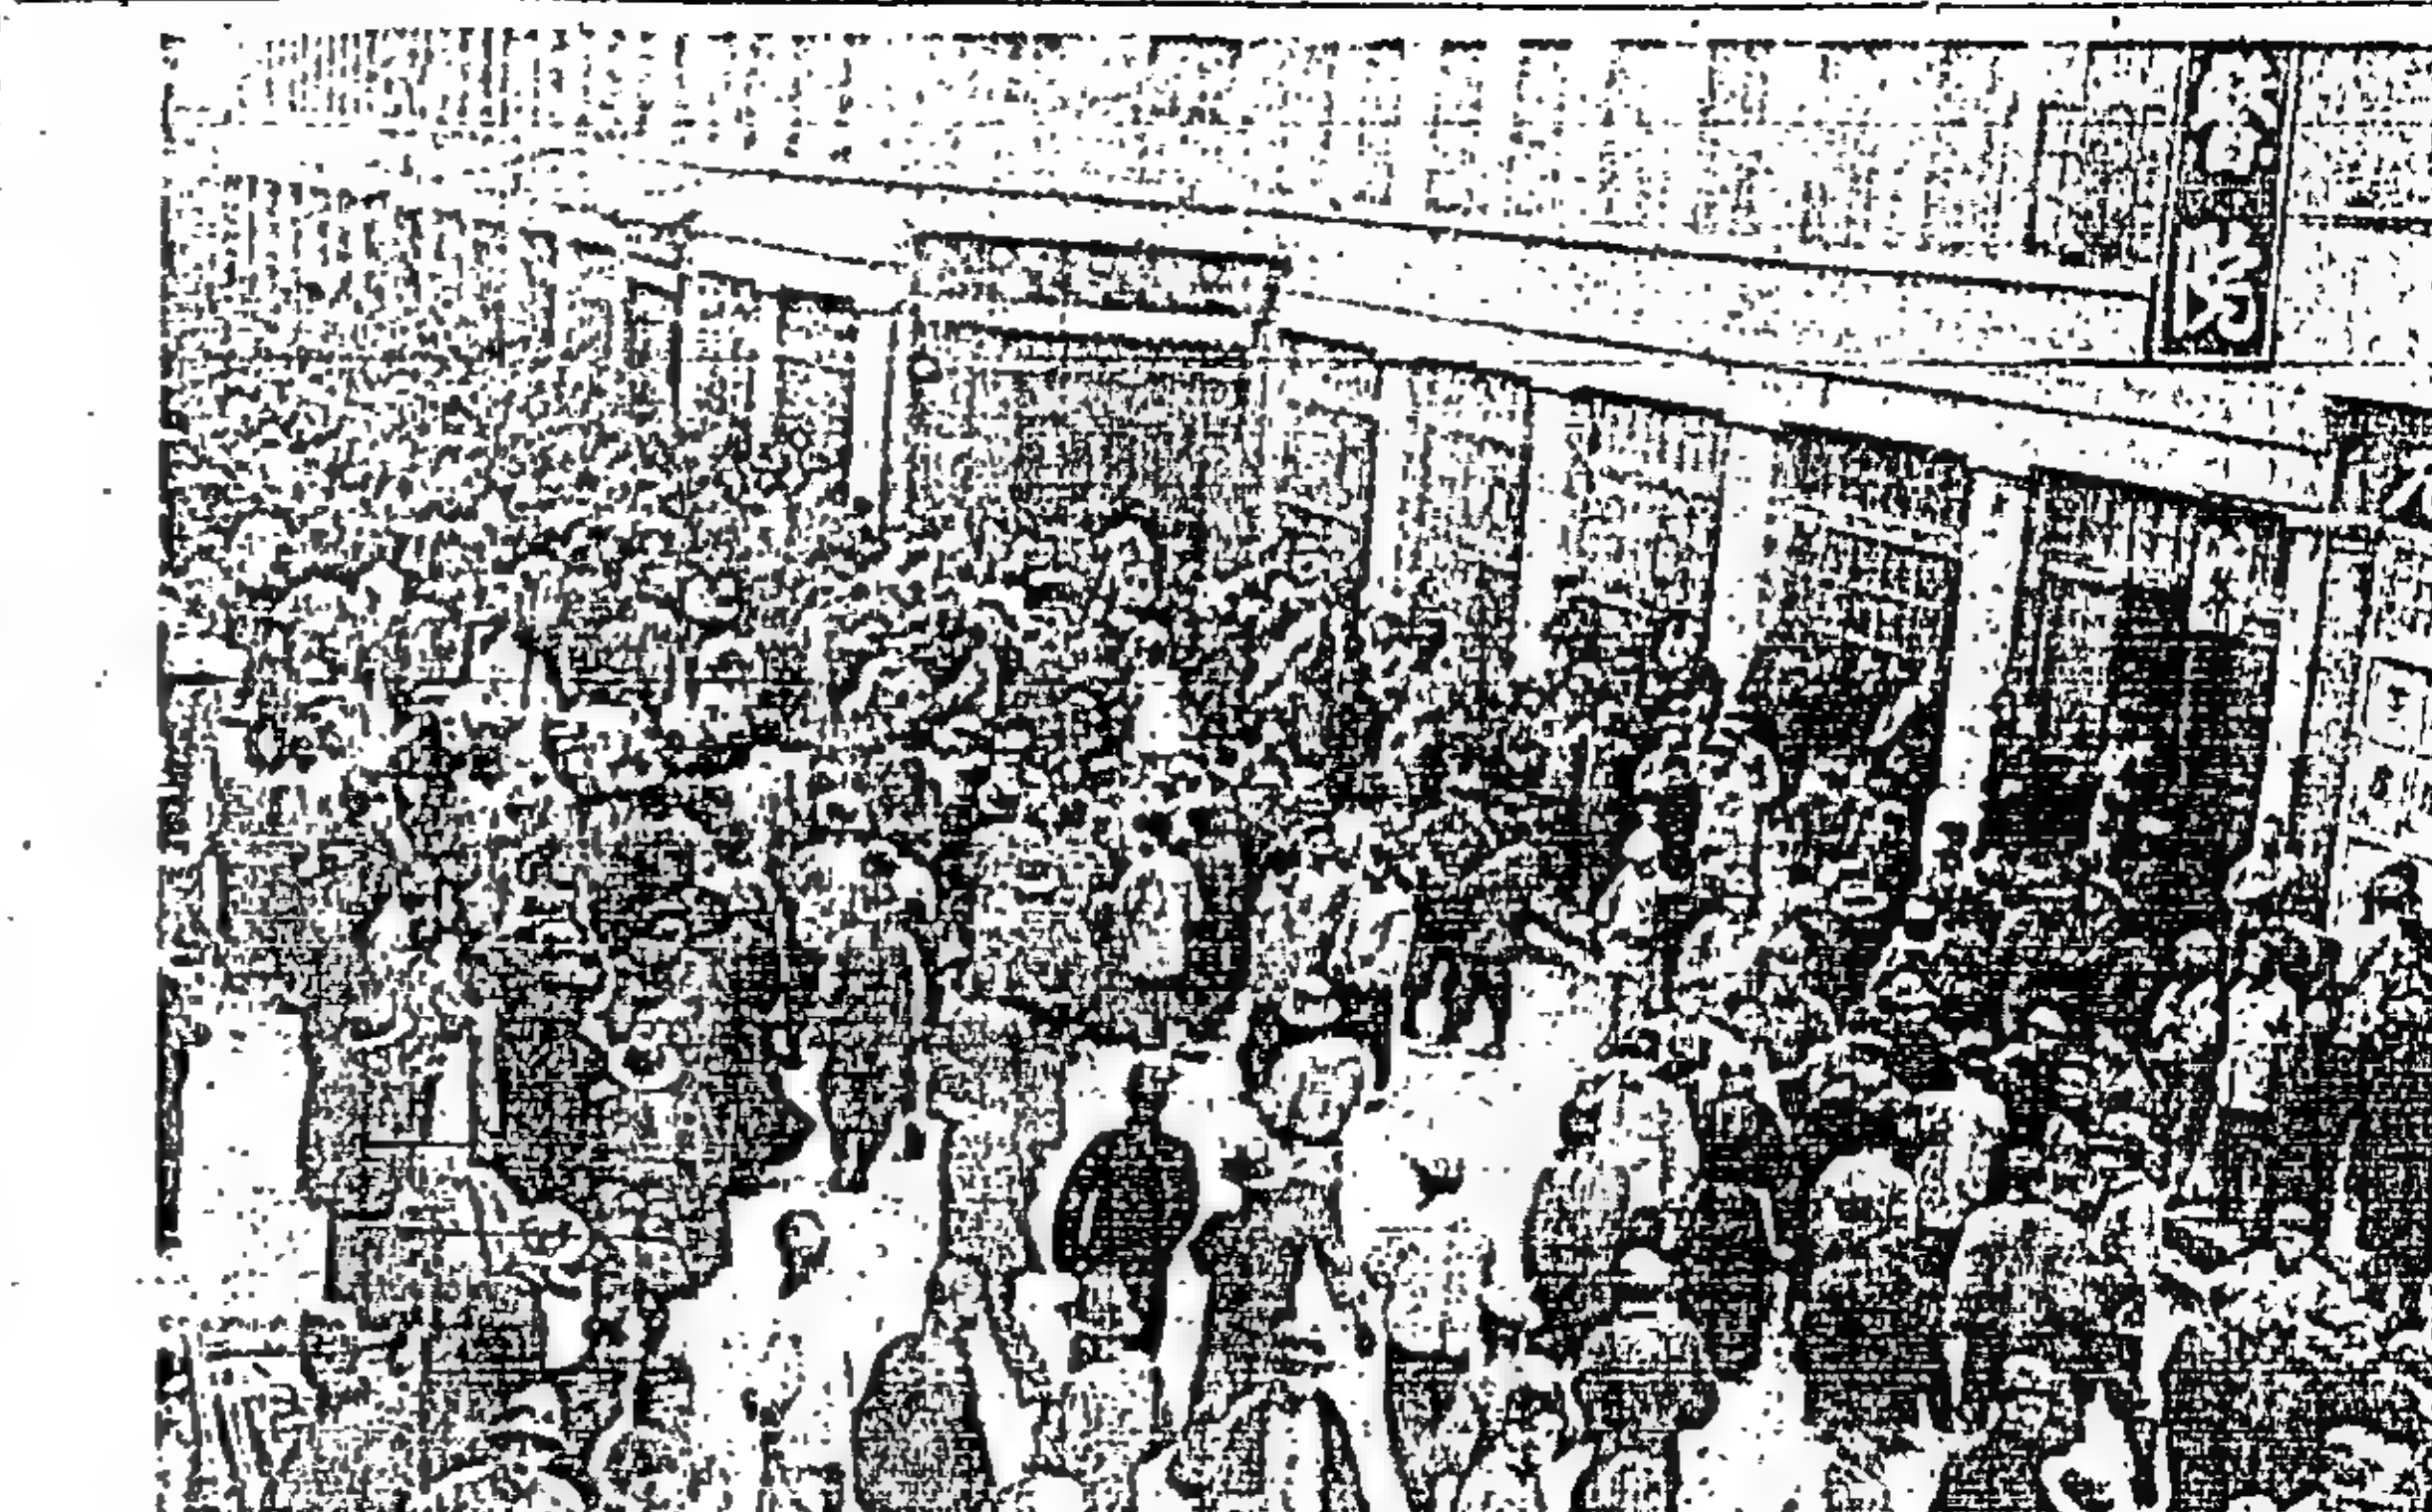

(SPECIAL TO "TELEGRAPH")

Los Angeles, Apr. 22.
The action by the mother of the boy film star, Freddie Bartholomew, to obtain custody of her child in a Los Angeles court, has failed. The boy will remain in the custody of his aunt, a sister of his father.

During the hearing to-day the judge received a cablegram signed by Freddie's father. It said Mr. Bartholomew had cancelled his wife's power of attorney and asked the bench to ignore any person claiming to represent him, except his New York attorney.

Freddie's grandparents, his father's father and mother, listened to the proceedings.

Mrs. Bartholomew, Freddie's aunt and guardian, charged that the boy's

SUBMARINE DAMAGED

PERSEUS RETURNS TO HONGKONG

A slight mishap to H.M. submarine Perseus, whilst bound for Weihaiwei, caused the vessel to return to Hongkong last night.

The Perseus left Hongkong on Tuesday, with other submarines, for the annual cruise to Northern waters and whilst on her way she engaged in exercises, during which she struck bottom whilst submerged.

Slight damage was suffered to the submarine's diving gear, and the commander thought it advisable for the craft to return to Hongkong for an examination.

The Perseus is now in dry dock at the Taikoo Dockyard.

How such penalties are damaging Italy was indicated in a report showing imports from Italy in 30 League countries fell from $14,222,000 in February 1935 to $5,800,000 in 1936 while exports to Italy from 30 League countries fell from $20,224,800 to $10,022,800.

The report published by the League was drafted by M. Auguste de Vasconcellos, Chairman of the League Committee of Lightening, in charge of penalties.

LABOUR ATTACKS BUDGET

MILLIONS SPENT FOR DEFENCE

OPPOSITION WARNING

London, Apr. 22.
When the debate on the Budget resolutions was resumed in the House of Commons this evening, criticism of the Labour opposition was voiced by Mr. Pethick Lawrence, who said he doubted whether in peace-time any Budget statement so staggering in its future outlook had ever been presented.

Additional taxes were being imposed despite a natural increase of revenue of £20,000,000 in the past year and of £20,000,000 in the Chancellor's anticipations for the present year. The cost to be incurred for defence was not, in the opinion of the Labour Party, due to circumstances over which the Government had had no control, but was largely due to the wholly ineffective foreign policy the Government had pursued over a course of years.

Mr. Lawrence warned the Chancellor that the departure from sound principles of finance, foreshadowed in his admission that he would have to consider meeting the bill for defence reorganisation by borrowing, would not pass unchallenged if and when it should arise.

LIBERAL ATTITUDE

For the Liberals, Sir Archibald Sinclair, who reminded the House that a thousand million pounds had been spent on defence in the last ten years, said the Government had done much by way of omission, to provoke and aggravate the international situation upon which they now sought to throw the blame for swelling expenditure and increased taxation. The House had a right to ask for a disclosure of the whole expenditure involved in the Government's new defence programme.

In the subsequent debate, which was continued by back bench supporters of the Government generally commended the budget proposals and recognised the wisdom and necessity of provision for the defence programme by the increase of income tax to 4s. 6d. in the pound.

The reply for the Government to-night will be made by the Financial Secretary, Mr. W. S. Morrison. The Chancellor will wind up the debate to-morrow night.—British Wireless.

It will be recalled that the defendant was previously charged at the Central Police Court, and that an inquest on Tsui Tong was commenced on April 3 and was subsequently adjourned sine die.

"WANTED" FOR ATTACK ON Mr. T. V. SOONG

Extradition proceedings against Yu Lap-fui, alias Li Shi-on, alias Li Shek-yu, 47 years, and ex-colonel of a regiment in Shanghai, and three others, whose extradition is being sought by the Nanking authorities on a charge of conspiracy to murder Mr. Wang Ching-wei at Nanking on November 1 last, were adjourned for one week before Mr. Schofield at the Central Police Court this morning.

Mr. D. L. Strollett, who is appearing for the prosecution, announced that to-morrow afternoon he will disclose the opening of another case against Yu Lap-fui in connection with the attack on Mr. T. V. Soong in July, 1934. He is wanted in Nanking in this case also.

In connection with the Wang case, Mr. Strollett stated that he had been informed that Mr. P. H. Sin, for the

ENTOMBED TEN DAYS IN SHAFT

TWO MEN FINALLY RESCUED

FEARFUL ORDEAL

The two men buried in the Moose River Mine cave-in have now been saved, but first reports of their rescue, received two days ago, have proved incorrect. The men were not reached, following a second rock slide in the mine, until ten days after they were originally trapped in a half-flooded shaft.

Moose River, Apr. 22.
Despite earlier reports that the two surviving victims of the Moose River Mine rock slide had been rescued, it is now disclosed that they were only sighted by rescue workers and communicated with directly and that, at the moment freedom seemed at hand, another rock slide shut them off.

The new fall completely blocked the opening rescue gang had cut into the half-flooded shaft where Dr. D. E. Robertson, Toronto surgeon and part owner of the mine, and Mr. Alfred Scadding, mine official, wait for deliverance. The body of the third man of the party, Mr. R. E. McGill, Toronto lawyer, lies near them. He died several days ago. The men have been entombed now for ten days.

However, rescuers are again nearing the victims. They can hear the voices of the buried men through the wall of debris and it is hoped they will complete the rescue and bring the two to the surface within a couple of hours.

Meanwhile there is frantic excitement at the mine head where a crowd waits. The wives of the two men are there.—Reuter.

BREAK THROUGH

Moose River, Apr. 22.
Rescuers have now broken through to the clear shaft in which Dr. Robertson and Mr. Scadding are trapped.

It is expected the two men will be carried to the surface receiving medical attention, as it is reported they are in great pain.

VICTIMS REACHED

The rescue party has now reached Dr. Robertson and Mr. Scadding. Immediately news of their success was received at the mine surface, the Provincial Minister of Health, Dr. Davin, descended the mine. Medical supplies, blankets, and hot water bottles were sent down. It may be some time before the men can be brought to the surface, as the tangle of pipes and rails must be cut to enable the passage of stretchers.

Special editions of the newspapers conveyed the news of the rescue to the people of Toronto.

The federal Prime Minister, Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King, announced the rescue to a Liberal meeting in Ottawa, amid cheers.—Reuter.

"FIRST NIGHT" Sees THE PICTURES JUMP OFF THE SCREEN

A film which combines colour, sound and stereoscopic vision has arrived in Hongkong. It is a trick film which runs for about ten minutes, but is a shape of things to come in moving pictures.

Before I saw it I was comfortably conservative about the cinema. After all, one can completely lose oneself in a good film. The fact that the images on the screen are in two dimensions and not three does not bother the ordinary man.

I was inclined to think that the three-dimensional cinema would be no great advance, that it would add nothing to the loveliness of the face of a Dietrich, nor increase the realism of the screen drama.

Now, having seen Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Audioscopiks" which is released for public entertainment at the King's Theatre as from yesterday, I have changed my mind. I can see the perfected stereoscopic film becoming another forward step in the cinema.

"Audioscopiks" has tones of colour, but they are not important. Its dramatic quality is its power of making images leap right off the screen and into the auditorium. It gives an entertainment which is no longer bounded by the size or the plane of the sheet on to which the picture is projected.

Within "Touch"

It does more than give the picture the roundness of the stage production; it projects the actors into the audience so that one feels one can touch them by stretching out a hand.

A girl is seen swinging. When the swing comes forward she seems to leave the screen and her feet endanger one's head. A man offers you a drink. He holds out the glass and one would swear that it was six inches away. Then he turns the soda-water siphon on you and a stream shoots out straight at your face.

There is a motor-car ride with swerves and collisions and it is so realistic that one's foot instinctively presses the carpet. Another man brings out a rifle, raises it, so that it sticks out from the screen, the muzzle, seemingly, being within a foot of your head. This is a sensation that the moving picture of to-day is incapable of giving.

Last month several of the original films shown by Lumiere in London forty years ago were screened in London. These pioneer efforts were entirely concerned with showing events like the launching of a boat, the demolition of a building, the stopping and starting of a train.

"Audioscopiks" is in the same state of development. But the man with the gun and the girl on the swing will be as important in the progress of "living pictures" as the boat, the train and the falling building. And we shall not have to wait another 40 years before the principles of stereoscopy will be an essential part of the cinema.

The catch about "Audioscopiks" is that one has to use a pair of spectacles, one lens red and the other green, to see the third dimension. Drop the spectacles, and the picture on the screen is just a blur of the two colours.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will not make a feature film by the process until invention has overcome the need of the spectacles. But in the meantime the company has given the King's Theatre 20,000 spectacles so that when "Audioscopiks" is shown to-day and on Friday and Saturday the audience will be able to enjoy it. And it is the most amusing and sensational "short" I have seen.

Russia's Huge DOG. HERO OF WAR Submarine IS DEAD Fleet SOLDIER'S FUNERAL FOR "RAGS"

The German Admiralty states that Russia has secretly built the mightiest submarine armada in the world.

According to official figures which have emanated from Berlin, 96 Soviet submarines are already in commission, while many more are under construction.

The present strength of other navies in submarines is as follows:

France	92
U.S.	30
Italy	77
Japan	67
British Empire	59
Germany	28

German information on Russian naval matters is usually very reliable, and, in the present instance, full evidence is offered in support of this revelation of Soviet naval power.

The official statement adds that, since 1932, Russia has been energetically building submarines, destroyers, and high-speed motor torpedo-boats, to the neglect of larger vessels. Now, however, the shipyards are turning out cruisers as well.

DISPOSITION OF FORCES

According to the same authority, the present disposition of the Russian light forces is as follows:

BALTIC—40 submarines, 71 destroyers, and motor torpedo-boats;
BLACK SEA—"At least 20 submarines," 27 destroyers and motor torpedo-boats;
WHITE SEA—6 submarines and

Renounced A Million— Left £37,000

The brewer's son who, as a young man, renounced the life of a millionaire's heir to devote himself to East End mission and temperance work, Mr. Frederick Charrington, left £37,319.

To the Tower Hamlets Mission, which had been the centre of his life for more than 60 years, he bequeathed £10,000 and the proceeds of sale of house property. The secretary of the mission, Mr. John Lawrence, and his assistant, Mr. Frederick Harding, receive £1,000 and £500 respectively, and other members of the staff share £2,000.

Osea Island, Essex, on which stands the Mission's convalescent home, is to follow a trust for the upkeep of the home.

11 destroyers?

FAR EAST—30 submarines "probably very many more" and 30 motor torpedo-boats.

In the Baltic and the Black Sea the light forces are supported by battleships and cruisers. "Practically all the submarines enumerated are brand-new," the German official statement continues. "They are of various types and of original Russian design."

Washington, Apr. 9.
"Rags," a real dog of war mascot of the First Division of the U.S. Expeditionary Force, is to have a soldier's funeral.

He saw more actual fighting than many a soldier, once saved his life by a parachute descent, and died yesterday at the home of Lieut.-Colonel R. Hardenburgh, here.

This doggy hero joined the U.S. Army one night when Private Jimmy Donovan, absent without leave, was observed by a keen-eyed military policeman straggling along a Paris street. Tucked under the soldier's arm was a very emaciated and dirty wire-haired terrier pup, which he had picked up in the gutter.

The M.P. took both of them in charge. The pup was christened "Rags" and taken on the strength. He went through the Meuse-Argonne campaign, carrying messages through shell-torn and gas-hungry sectors until he and his master, Donovan, were gassed and wounded together and the dog lost the sight of an eye.

One of the couple's most thrilling experiences occurred in an observation balloon. A German aeroplane swooped down on it, and Donovan leapt out with "Rags" in his arms.

As his parachute drifted to earth the German airman followed manoeuvring to bring his machine gun into action. Then he noticed the dog, and grinning, he waved his hand, barked sharply, and soared away.

FOOTPRINT IN WAR MUSEUM

A footprint in ink of "Rags" appears in a copy of his biography, which the 1st Division sent to the Imperial War Museum, London, to lie beside the records of other war heroes.

CROSSING THE WORLD IN TWO DAYS

Luxurious Travel in Fleet of New 90-m.p.h Zeppelins

HINDENBURG MARVELS

(By A Special Correspondent).

Friedrichshafen, Apr. 15.
GERMANY'S plans to build a series of giant new Zeppelins were told to me to-day by Capt. Lehmann, who will command the Hindenburg on her maiden voyage to Rio next month.

While showing me over the world's greatest airship he disclosed that orders for the construction of Zeppelins to work on Dutch, Japanese and Russian air services are already under negotiation.

"The future of the Zeppelin type of airship is now assured," said Capt. Lehmann. "There is not the slightest doubt of that."

"The Hindenburg's cruising speed will be 90 miles an hour, and at that figure her progress will be smoother than an ocean liner. You will see, that her comforts are equal to that of a ship."

No Vibration

"The passengers will feel no vibration, they will hear no sound from the engines, and they will be able to book their trips with the knowledge that this great airship will be unaffected by weather conditions."

"We are confident that the Hindenburg will cut the time to Pernambuco by 10 hours, and the outward journey will in future be covered in 2½ days."

"It is difficult to understand why Britain, with her many Empire mail passenger routes, has not concentrated more closely on the airship. The Graf Zeppelin has made 110 Atlantic flights and covered 4,000,000 kilometres without a sign of mishap."

Final Touches

To-day workmen were busy putting the final touches on the Hindenburg in preparation for her first flight.

The interior of the Hindenburg bears a strong resemblance to that of an ocean-going liner. Her broad decks are railed like a ship.

Commander Lehmann showed me the swimming bath, where passengers will be able to take a dip in mid-air, and the luxurious smoking-room.

The kitchens are equipped with the latest electric cooking and refrigerating plant. The entire passenger and crew's quarters in the Hindenburg are recessed into the envelope, and only the control cabin and engines are slung outside. No engine vibration, whatever, reaches the passenger section.

Hot and cold water is supplied to each cabin, and every passenger has a 'phone.

After the vastness of the other sections of the Hindenburg the control cabin is bewildering in its smallness and simplicity.

The great airship is operated from a control panel which is only slightly more complicated than the average wireless set.

TRAGIC RELIC OF 1933 FIRE

A fire-scorched hand has been found among the debris in the burnt-out French liner L'Atlantique, which has been beached at Port Glasgow for breaking up.

The hand is believed to belong to one of the bodies not recovered after the fire of January, 1933, which caused the death of 17 of the crew of 211.

A workman on a tour of inspection had a terrifying experience. His hurricane lamp went out after he had got some way. Afraid to move further lest he should fall through a broken deck he stood and shouted for help. His calls were heard but it was two hours before he was located.

SECRETS OF RADIO RAY THAT GUARDS WARSHIPS

DETECTS THE PRESENCE OF SUBMARINES

War-Time Device Has Been Developed

There is no mystery about the basic principle of the British anti-submarine device which Mr. Somerset de Chair, the young Conservative M.P. for S.W. Norfolk, stated in the House of Commons recently. It is a matter of fact that any submarine coming within striking distance would be in danger of instant destruction. The device is a wireless ray which when reflected from a submarine enables the ship sending it out to fix the position of the enemy.

What is a matter of secrecy to-day is the extent to which it has been developed since its introduction during the war.

Mr. de Chair was no doubt referring to anti-submarine measures which have been developed since the war," said Admiral Sir Roger Keyes, M.P.

Lord Strabolgi, who as Commander Kenworthy served in the Navy during the war, said: "The modern torpedo has a range of about 10,000 yards, although it is very difficult to score a hit at this distance. In my day the old hydrophone arrangement could be used up to depths of about 180ft., and was mainly useful for spotting submarines lying at the bottom."

It is learnt that the range of the ray is now definitely greater than that mentioned by Lord Strabolgi, but how great it is is a matter of official secrecy. Screens of these rays can now be established which make it practically impossible for a submarine to approach within "killing" distance of a big ship without her presence being detected.

£7,000 PENALTY FOR CUSTOMS FRAUD

A fine of £6,900 was imposed at Liverpool recently on a horse dealer, Richard Leslie Weaver, aged 34, of Malpas, Cheshire, and his clerk, Harold Thomas Brown, aged 29, was fined £190, for having been concerned in a fraudulent attempt to evade Customs duties on imported Irish hunters.

Weaver was also ordered to pay £100 costs. He contended that the duty was leviable on the open market value of the horses in this country at the time of importation, a value which was considerably lower than the amount paid for the horses in a limited market in the Irish Free State.

Roman Catholics Urged to Stand Together

A STATEMENT by the Roman Catholic Bishop of Southwark in his diocesan notes in "The Southwark Record" has some speculation.

"The day may come very shortly," the Bishop writes, "when Catholics in this country will be called upon to follow the lead of the Bishops and to defend their principles in acts as well as words. 'No opportunity must be lost of preparing now for that day, and possible sources of weakness in our position must be remedied without delay.'"

It was stated by an official of Bishop's House, Southwark, that no direct political action was implied.

"It merely means a little more organisation of our own Catholic activities."

"We have various associations of men, women and children. The idea is to organise instead of being purely parochial, so that concerted action can be taken in any Catholic question that may arise."

"It is proposed to have a central committee to deal with such questions."

NOT POLITICAL
"The scheme has nothing to do with politics; it relates to our own Catholic activities. For instance,

MORE TRAVELLING BY RAIL

The number of passenger journeys made on the four principal British railways during 1935, according to the Ministry of Transport, recently was 1,229,846,000, or just under 30,000,000 more than in 1934.

The number of passengers carried last year was 865,625,000 or 23,000,000 more than in the preceding 12 months.

Expenditure during 1935 was £127,400,000, leaving not a surplus of £20,000,000, compared with £28,700,000 for 1934.

REVENGE ON A WHITE RAJAH

(By a Special Correspondent)

Heswall, Cheshire, Apr. 18.

I HAVE talked with a woman who lives under the shadow of an Eastern curse which, for almost a hundred years, has brought tragedy and disaster to her family.

She is Mrs. J. Schofield, of Oldfield House, Heswall; and she told me how an Indian scientist, Mr. Manikon, great-grandson of the man who first pronounced the curse, is to-day working to dispel it.

The story began on the 13th May, 1844, when Mrs. Schofield's ancestor, a White Rajah in India, won a law case which gave him jurisdiction over land on which a Vestal Virgin's Temple was built.

The White Rajah roused the temple, and two days later was found stabbed to death.

On the dagger a parchment had been stuck which contained a curse. This has followed his family from generation to generation.

GAS TRAGEDY

The latest link in the tragedy was the discovery of Mrs. Schofield's mother in a gas-filled room in Kensington.

This tragedy caused Mr. P. Manikon to write to Mrs. Schofield.

He told her he was the great-grandson of the man who killed and cursed the White Rajah—and was ready to do all in his power to remove this terrible curse.

"The curse has followed our family for 90 years," Mrs. Schofield told me to-day. "My father died a violent death; and the discovery of my mother in that gas-filled room makes me feel that this is something more than a series of coincidences."

SCIENTIST'S OFFER

The detailed story was told to me by Mr. Manikon, keen-eyed, swarthy scientist of North Kensington.

"When I heard of the mother's death I wrote to Mrs. Schofield," he said.

"I do not wish to see any more harm come to Mrs. Schofield or her family through the revengeful spirits of my ancestors. I want to help her."

"The curse has wrought enough trouble already. If I can meet a member of the family, and found a reunion on a Christian basis, I am only too ready to do so."

THE KING'S OFFICE-ON-WHEELS

Several improvements, suggested by the King, have been incorporated in the new "office-car" which has been added to the royal garage.

A straight-eight, with a special body, the car is fitted with a desk in the rear seat.

The desk, with its special lighting arrangement, was designed by the King so that he can work as he travels on the State papers that claim his constant attention.

Finished black and capable of 85 miles an hour, the car has cost over £1,000.

JIM AND AMY'S UNPAID MEDALS

JEWELLERS who made the medals which were presented to Mr. and Mrs. James Mollison by the city of New York at the end of their trans-Atlantic flight in 1933 have never been paid.

Two medals were given to Jim and one to his wife Amy, states Reuter.

Now the City Treasurer has asked the Board of Estimates to pay a bill of about £15 which has been presented to the city by a firm of jewellers which made the medals.

The Treasurer is without power to pay it, because no appropriation was ever made to cover the cost of the medals.

Altogether six medals are involved. These were given to the city's distinguished guests between June, 1932, and July, 1935.

Besides Mr. and Mrs. Mollison, medals were given to Amelia Earhart, Wiley Post and General Balbo.

Curate's Wife Wins

Mrs. Ewerd Rouds, wife of the Curate of Heygham (near Morecambe) Parish Church, saw her horse, Pink Coat, win the Lancashire Hurdle Race at Aintree recently at odds of 20 to 1—and no member of the family had a penny on it.

They do not bet, but the race is worth about £400 to the winner.

How Universe Is Expanding

DISTANCES THAT DEFY TELESCOPES

San Francisco, Apr. 13.
A new "catalogue" of the distances and movements of 100 "universes" outside and beyond our sun's system of stars has been issued by Mount Wilson Observatory, home of the world's largest telescope.

Carrying our knowledge of exact movement further out into space than ever before, this catalogue conveys the astonishing information that the most distant universe yet surveyed in this way is moving away from our own at a speed of 24,000 miles a second.

These observations, made in the 100-inch and 60-inch telescopes at Mount Wilson, are taken to provide further confirmation of the theory that the universe as a whole is expanding, as frequently discussed by Sir James Jeans, Sir Arthur Eddington, and other astronomers.

The distance of the fastest moving universe is given as 1,400,000,000,000,000,000 miles. To travel this distance, light would take 230,000,000 years.

The group of universes to which this universe belongs is so distant that only the brightest specimens can be observed in the 100-inch instrument. The distances of the others—150 of them can be photographed—cannot be measured.

GRAVITATIONAL PULL

In another similar "cluster" there are some 200 different universes. The distance of one of the brightest of these is believed to be about the same, although the measurement is in this case less certain. For the measurement of the speed of movement of still more distant members of these groups of universes astronomers will have to wait for the new 200-inch telescope—and even the range of this will be limited compared with the universes awaiting catalogue.

Another feature of the new catalogue is that it has for the first time been possible to obtain records of a sufficient number of universes belonging to a single group to study the mutual movements of the universes within that group.

The provisional conclusion reached is that these groups of universes represent a relatively stable arrangement, which is held together by the mutual gravitational pull of the universes in question.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

MARKET UPWARD YESTERDAY

New York, April 22.
Swan, Culbertson & Fritz Dow Jones' Summary of yesterday's market.—The market to-day was upward on moderate covering by short interests and the absence of further selling pressure. Trading was on the light side. Wide gains were recorded in a few issues on selective buying. Most stocks on the list were up from fractions to two points. Steel shares were in demand early in the session, but later eased slightly. Automotive and motor-equipment stocks also advanced early in the day, but later declined slightly. Copper issues were firm. Stocks on the Curb Exchange were up fractions to two points. The turnover was the lightest for weeks. The market for bonds was steady.

Swan, Culbertson & Fritz Wall Street Journal comment on 21/4 market.—The Tax Bill presented in the House of Representatives to-day is a more serious threat to complicated Utility holdings company organizations than any legislation yet adopted. Chrysler Motor Company's first-quarter earnings are likely to be somewhat larger than last year. Most brokers say that there is no noticeable liquidation from Europe. There have been very few margin calls recently since most of the recent liquidation was voluntary. Wall Street is not bullish on the long-pull, but it apparently believes that a number of stocks have a safe run ahead in their business. There is some bullish talk regarding tobacco stocks.

S. C. & F. New York office cable: Stocks.—This market responded to better sentiment in Wall Street and traders are now more optimistic. The Public Service of New Jersey earned $2.43 per share for the year ended March 31st, against $2.74 the previous year. The National Biscuit Company earned 39 cents per share for the March quarter against 22 cents during the corresponding quarter of last year. The Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation earned 50 cents per share as compared with 25 cents during the March quarter of last year.

Cotton: Official details regarding the weather show more beneficial rains in the West than were expected. This had an easing effect on new-crops. The Trade is buying largely near-cotton. A heavy movement in Government stocks is expected in three weeks' time.

Wheat: Drought deterioration reports are increasing and no relief is forecast. There has been some heavy export of Canadian wheat.

Corn: Cash demand is active, whilst active receipts are light. This market will probably follow wheat in staging a further advance.

Rubber: Further liquidation, without any aggressive Trade support, was in evidence. We would suggest a continuation of a cautious attitude.

Special: Average daily production of petroleum during the past week is estimated at 2,935,000 barrels, against 2,890,000 barrels the previous week. The Edison Electric Institute estimates electricity production at 1,915,000,000 k.w.h., an increase of 12.5 per cent. from the corresponding period of last year.

people, when she received Reuter's special correspondent.

This was the most critical hour in Ethiopia's history, she said, but there was still time for those desiring justice to take action and end a most unjust war and wicked aggression against an independent, non-aggressive people.

All those respecting the principles designed to regulate relations between nations must be stung with shame and indignation by the unfairness and inequality under which Ethiopia is suffering.

Ethiopia is not defeated, she maintained. She would defend her just cause to the end. The Emperor herself would remain at the capital, she said.

The Empress appealed to France, the emblem of liberty and equality, and to Britain, defender of freedom and justice for all races. She appealed to the whole world to abandon the delay and save her "poor country."

More Money For War

League to Act?

London, Apr. 22.
Asked in the House of Commons what action the League of Nations proposed to take in the Italian-Ethiopian dispute after the intensification by Italy of her aggression, the Foreign Secretary recalled the terms of the resolution of the Committee of Thirteen on April 20, which set on record that the war was continuing under conditions which had been declared contrary to the Covenant and which involved the execution of obligations laid upon members of the League in such a case by the Covenant.

Referring to the report of experts on the application of sanctions, Mr. Eden commented that information which was available showed that the effect of existing sanctions was becoming increasingly severe, and added that it has been arranged that the Committee of Eighteen should meet at a date close to that of the next Council meeting on May 11.

Cargo Coolie Sentenced For "Wounding"

GRAVER CHARGE DISMISSED

SURRENDERED VOLUNTARILY

Found "Guilty" by the jury on a charge of unlawful wounding, Lau Chun, 52-year old cargo coolie, was sentenced to six months' hard labour by Mr. Justice H.P. Lindell, Acting Chief Justice, at the Criminal Sessions this morning.

The accused was also tried on an alternative but graver charge of wounding with intent, but he was found "Not Guilty" on this count.

Mr. E. H. Williams, Assistant Attorney-General, appeared for the prosecution, and the accused was not legally represented. The following jury was empanelled: Messrs. A. Becker (foreman), Woo Wing-chow, Robert Woo, Un King-sung, C. Ju York-sun, Ho Chow and F. M. Britto.

Outlining the facts of the case, Mr. Williams said the victim, of the assault was a man named Tung Hoi, who was an assistant hawker to a woman called Mak Hing at 28 Amoy Street, ground floor where the accused was a sub-tenant. The accused and the victim had known each other for about ten years and there had never been any quarrel between them.

On February 3, the day before the assault, the accused was told by Mak Hing that he had to move as he had not paid his rent for four months. The accused did not say anything to this.

TELLS OF ATTACK

The next morning, about 6 o'clock, the victim, Tung Hoi who did not live at 28 Amoy Street, went to the place to do his work as usual. He went to the kitchen to assist in carrying a pot of congee, and on the way he saw the accused standing in the passage way. A woman, Lam Ping, the daughter-in-law of Mak Hing, took the pot of congee from the victim, and the accused was slung, and Tung Hoi held the rear.

As they were passing the accused, Tung Hoi suddenly felt a blow on the head and did not remember anything further until he found himself in the hospital with an aching head and a sore body. Lam Ping, who was in front, felt the pole jerk away from her shoulder. She turned round and saw Tung Hoi lying on the floor, with a crow-bar nearby.

GAVE HIMSELF UP

Meanwhile, the accused had disappeared, but later in the same day he went to No. 2 Police Station and gave himself up, saying that he had struck a man on the head at 28 Amoy Street and that the man was dead. He also stated that the man had told the principal tenant to have him cleared out of the premises. A Chinese detective was sent to accompany the accused back to the floor where the latter pointed out Tung Hoi who was sitting on a chair. Tung Hoi was subsequently taken to the Government Civil Hospital where he remained for about seven weeks.

The same day the accused was formally charged at the Police Station with unlawful wounding, and in reply to this he said: "I did wound him, I came to the station and made the report."

At the Magistracy where he was subsequently tried, he gave evidence in which he admitted having committed the assault but stated that he did not know for what reason he did it. He further stated that he had no grievance against Tung Hoi, and added "It is lucky for him that he is not dead but it is unlucky for me as I will have to go to gaol."

The jury retired for about five minutes and returned the verdicts as stated. In passing sentence, His Lordship took consideration of the fact that the accused had already been in custody for nearly two and a half months.

PROMISED JOBS TO YOUTHS

OBTAINED $50 BY FALSE PRETENCES

The case against a former pupil of St. Paul's College, Ki-Sai-cheung, alias Vincent Ki, 25, was concluded before Mr. E. H. Hinesworth at the Kowloon Magistracy this morning when he was found guilty of obtaining $50 by false pretences.

He was charged with obtaining the money from Man Kam-chung, 18, Li Tak-chun, 16, Mak Chik-tong, 18, Le Kwan and Li Hau-mun, parporting to be able to obtain employment for them as apprentice electricians at Messrs. Jardine, Matheson and Co.

Evidence had previously been given that on December 23 last a teacher who knew defendant well, met him at Hingtham and was asked if he knew any persons who wanted jobs. The teacher then got in touch with complainants who were promised by defendant work in Jardine's on payment of $10 apiece. Defendant promised that the jobs would be ready on January 1. For various reasons the date was extended, and finally the complainants took action and had defendant arrested.

Defendant denied this evidence, declaring that the money was a loan. Det. Sgt. Ellis prosecuting, stated the defendant was unable to return the $50.

His Worship declared that in his own opinion it had been proved that defendant had obtained employment, complainants, inducing them to part with the money when he was never in position to obtain them employment. He therefore found prisoner guilty and bound him over for a year in $100, and ordered $50 damages to be made, in default of which he was to undergo six weeks' imprisonment.

BANISHEES RETURN

TWO REMANDED FOR FURTHER INQUIRY

Admitting he had returned to the Colony after having been banished for ten years on February 16, 1932, Cheung Lin, 24, unemployed, was sentenced to six months' hard labour by Mr. Q. A. A. Macfarlane at the Kowloon Magistracy this morning. Defendant pleaded that he was passing through on his way to Macao.

Appearing on a charge of committing a breach of a Deportation Order, dated January 2, 1935, by which he had been banished for life, Leung Yau-choi, 38, unemployed, was remanded for one week.

Inspector Shumman in applying for the remand stated that it was a particularly bad case and the police were asking for a remand with a view to taking the case for committal.

Cheung Choi, 38, unemployed, who was banished for ten years on October 1 last, for ten years, was also remanded for one week.

OPIUM DIVAN RAIDED

Fines totalling $250, with the alternative of two months' hard labour, were inflicted on Chu Chi, 46, who admitted keeping an opium divan at No. 108 Kilung Street first floor, and the possession of non-Government prepared opium and heroin pills.

Detective-Sergeant C. H. Goodwin stated that it was the second time within a month that the place had been raided. There were seven smokers on the floor and three females who were undoubtedly assistants. The drugs, pipes and lamps were confiscated.

An open-air tombola will be held at the Wellington Barracks at 7.30 p.m. to-morrow (Friday).

Fiorenza Elaborates Confession

BUT FIANCEE WON'T BELIEVE IN GUILT

HORRIBLE CRIME

(Special To "Telegraph")

New York, Apr. 22. John Fiorenza, his belt and tie removed to prevent a possible attempt at suicide, appeared on a lighted platform in a police line-up to-day and admitted the murder of Mrs. Nancy Titterton, novelist.

He was immediately taken before a court and charged with homicide. The State Prosecutor, Mr. William Dodge, will seek an indictment to-morrow and promises a trial as soon as the courts can arrange it.

A tiny, sad-eyed mother and John's fiancée—he was to be married in June—still hope for some miracle to clear his name. Even in face of his confession his fiancée, Miss Pauline de Antonis, says she will not believe him guilty "until he tells me so himself."

Elaborating his confession, Fiorenza said after he had attacked Mrs. Titterton he carried her to the bathroom intending to drown her. He was unable to find the bathtub stopper and so left her to strangle from the garment knotted about her neck.

Physicians are baffled by the jekyll and hyde character of the youthful criminal. Fiorenza was held in high esteem by many friends.—United Press.

SOLICITING ALLEGED

MILITARY POLICE EVIDENCE

An unlicensed ricksha puller, Chong Ka, aged 20, and a 52-year-old widow, Lau Ho, were brought before Mr. S. F. Balfour at the Central Magistracy this morning charged with soliciting for an immoral purpose in Wanchai last night. The complainant was Lance Corporal John Charles Kinder, of the Military Foot Police.

Giving the facts of the case, Sub-Inspector Whelan stated that about 8.30 last night, L/Cpl. Kinder was on patrol in Johnson Road and near the junction of Luard Road, first defendant came up to him and asked if he wanted a ricksha. Complainant said he did not want one, but defendant again asked him. Complainant then got into the ricksha and was taken to Fenwick Street where second defendant approached him and made the suggestion, "the subject of the charge, at the same time pointing to a young girl next to her. A Chinese detective then came upon the scene and arrested the defendants.

Corroborative evidence was given by L/Cpl. Kinder.

Both defendants denied the offence, first accused saying he did not understand complainant and took him to second defendant to find out what he wanted. Second accused said she was paid 20 cents by the girl, Chan Sze, to go for a walk with her. When complainant got to them she thought he wanted her to buy something for him, and admitted having mentioned the sum of $2.

The girl, Chan Sze, in evidence said she was a stranger from Canton and as she did not know her way about, she asked the woman defendant to accompany her on a walk for the sum of 20 cents. When the ricksha coolie approached them with complainant, witness alleged she just went to have a look. She denied having said anything. Witness also said she did not know the woman and had met her casually in the street.

First accused was sentenced to six weeks' hard labour and second defendant to two weeks' hard labour.

BRITAIN'S BUDGET

Whatever may be said of Mr. Neville Chamberlain's Budget proposals, the outstanding feature of the statement which he presented in the House of Commons on Tuesday is certainly the soundness of the British finance system, coupled with the evidence it affords of generally improved conditions. In spite of supplementary votes three times the figures estimated, the financial year has ended with a surplus of three millions sterling, contrasted with an expected excess of revenue over expenditure totalling only half a million. Mr. Chamberlain rightly claimed this as a wonderful demonstration of the buoyancy of the national revenue. In days when most Governments are facing heavy deficits and are quite unable to balance their budgets, the British position must be regarded as amazingly good. For the soundness of the Government's finance methods there can be nothing but praise. When the position is analysed, the thought naturally suggests itself that the situation would be even brighter still but for the necessity, in view of the general international outlook of huge expenditure on the defence services. The nation, however, has long since reconciled itself to these heavy charges, conscious of the need of real security in these times of general anxiety and widespread uncertainty regarding the future. The programme envisaged by the Government calls for the laying out of tremendous sums, but it is evident that the intention is not to meet the whole cost out of current revenue. Mr. Chamberlain having forecasted the possibility of part being met by way of loan. Such a loan would without question be readily taken up. The Government has with obvious reluctance decided on some increase in taxation, and, on the principle of spreading this over the community generally, the additional revenue is to be found from slight advances in income tax and the tea duty. On the other hand, some concession has been made in increasing the income tax allowance in respect of children and in raising the general allowance for married people. This will offset in some measure the new imposts. Increased taxation, whatever its form, is never popular, but, considering

LETTERS of all sorts,
Typed and scrawled:
angry and glad: long and
short: crazy and sensible.

What manner of people write them?

And why?

To get trouble and a correspondence, all one need do is attempt to answer those two questions.

COMMONER than you might think is the plumb crazy letter. Easy enough to recognise on sight . . . the nouns are in capitals . . . almost every other phrase is underlined by a wavy line for emphasis . . . the handwriting is oddly irregular . . . name, address, and date may be omitted . . . rarely are all three present.

Contents are of two kinds:—

The first . . . full of hate . . . makes vague references to malign forces, usually unnamed . . . full of ideas of persecution . . . will sometimes boldly assert that the writer of the criticised article is really some one else in disguise.

The other kind . . . quite grandiose . . . offers grotesque and cranky solutions to the world's really big problems . . . suggests pretty bluntly that it is the writer's mission to offer these to an ungrateful, pretty undeserving world . . . says he.

THE second type is similar but more articulate and, in these educated days, commoner . . . the letter-writer who is letting off steam . . . he is working off some

NOTES OF THE DAY

LIFETIME SALARIES

The time is not far off, we believe, when the pensions system, as it is enjoyed here and at home and in most civil services of the present day, will be radically changed. Reforms recently suggested are the first reactions of a public which commences to be just a little critical of the treatment civil servants receive. For instance, this pension system; how many employers of labour, even the most highly skilled and specialised labour, guarantee a man a consistent increase in wages and a lifetime bonus of some fifty or sixty per cent. of his pay at the time of retirement? Not many. Despite the risks to which men of the Army and Navy are always liable to be exposed, civil servants' pensions are considerably higher than those granted to the fighting services.

We believe it is near the time when compulsory saving by a contributory Provident Fund system will take the place of pension schemes. Private enterprise is becoming more and more widely interested in this development, and is generally ready to support Provident Funds in the belief that a worker with a savings account is of greater value. The worker actually creates his own pension by this system, assisted by the employer. Together with health and unemployment insurance, Provident Funds bring a social security never known before. And one of these days the workers of all nations who pay taxes are going to demand a cutting down in the bill for civil service pensions.

the general situation, it is difficult to see that the Government could have chosen any other type than that upon which it has decided. Taking all the factors into account, the Budget can be regarded as even better than might have been expected, even though the increased taxation may prove irksome. Its chief feature, as we have remarked, is its reflection of the inherent soundness and stability of British finance methods.

Have You Ever written to the Editor?

• it does you good to get things off your chest sometimes . . .

personal problem of his own, though you might not know it. One of the functions of any letter column is to act as a safety-valve for his—

Something written has touched him well on the raw . . . he is apt to regard it almost as a personal insult . . . he will express himself with an acerbity that he would never permit himself in private life . . . to the point even of suggesting that any one who thinks different is feeble-minded, dishonest and hardly worthy of being permitted to live . . . his letter is highly charged and explosive . . . all plainly a result of the sudden release of highly compressed and suppressed emotion.

He may be a disgruntled old gent . . . neglected and unloved . . . who blasphemes at the younger generation . . . in reality, poor old gent, he is being sorry for himself. Or an octogenarian lady—she recalls the gracious measures of a delightful long-past quarter-century when she queened it . . . the world is naturally not now so good, God bless her!

An unhappy, neglected, querulous wife who laments the lack of chivalry and romance . . . and is to act as a safety-valve for his— she is having an oblique smack at her husband . . . Whose fault is it anyway that she wisely chose severity instead of romance? The spitter-in spirit if not in fact—vehemently condemning the committers of cruelty to dumb animals . . . cruel to her fellow-man . . . perhaps not so cruel as they to her.

A THIRD type of letter writer is the exhibitionist, the epistolary nudist, the breaker of records. His grand passion is to be seen in print . . . he writes weekly or oftener to the papers . . . but is only successful once in a while. Not such a bad sort really . . . his stuff is often good despite the slightly kinked motives that father it . . . style a little on the dogmatic schoolmasterish side . . . his ring, . . . there is a touch of acerbity, a mild "after-kick," directed towards the Editor, whom he half-suspects of being loath to publish the stuff.

FOURTH is the type—fortunately much the commonest—which no editor can have too much of . . . the informative letter writer . . . he has an interesting fact, opinion, argument or suggestion to contribute (there isn't any one of us who hasn't) . . . he knows his stuff, and he writes clearly, concisely, neatly. A good article of this type is better than a sloppy article to any editor; and it helps him to keep in contact with his readers, to give them the newspaper service that they want.

FIFTH is the inquirer . . . the writer who asks for some specific service or information . . . Can corns be cured by auto-suggestion? What makes bald men bald? such like.

SO here are some of the reasons why people write to the newspapers:—

- 1 Inquiry . . . to get specific information or service.
- 2 Response . . . to contribute useful information, opinion, argument or suggestion . . . this sort of contributor provides the editor with a sort of straw vote of subscriber-opinion.
- 3 Letting off steam . . . this provides a vicarious emotional satisfaction for those readers who have similar complexes . . . similar straws in their bonnets.
- 4 The crazy letter . . . a very extreme degree of 3.
- 5 Exhibitionism . . . a motive only abnormal in excess and often motivating quite valuable stuff.

READERS whose letters would be most valued often hesitate to write, thinking: What good can my letter do?

But don't forget that a newspaper should really—perhaps ideally—be the result of an interaction between its readers and its Editor.

The letter to the Editor is an important part of that interaction. It is the reader's Comment—the Editor's due.

Type out 100 words in three paragraphs. Make the first your idea, the second your argument, the third your conclusion—preferably a constructive conclusion.

Then post it and forget about it . . . anyway, it hasn't done you any harm.

Writing to the Press is—among other things—a splendid spiritual aperient.

Men have staved off suicide by a useful habit like that.

H.P.D.

TO-DAY IN THE PAST

A Poet Was Born At Stratford

By Sir Cedric
Hardwicke

SHAKESPEARE is not only our greatest dramatist and poet; he is also our greatest national stock joke. Even in these days, when we appear to be losing our sense of humour, the comic artist and the music hall comedian can always be certain of a laugh by calling on the name of Shakespeare, and it is only in the schoolroom and the cocktail bar that a joke about him will not get over.

They will not laugh in the first of those two centres of learning because the literature hour is no time for levity, and in the second because they dare not.

The snobbish jury that forbids any Bright Young Person from admitting the slightest knowledge of or interest in Shakespeare derives from the school days—those days when the child attains a hatred of him so implacable that it might have been inculcated with set purpose and set malice. In fact, from my own experience, I was convinced that the master to whose doleful lot it fell to take the bored and listless class through "Henry V." and "Julius Caesar" . . . schools recognise no other Shakespearean plays, so far as I have ever been able to discover—was handing on a vendetta bequeathed to him in turn by the English master of his own childhood days.

"Studying" a Shakespearean play, do this by wrestling him from the analysing it, dissecting it, writing notes about it for all the world as if we were witnesses at an autopsy, was only one of the ways in which

Shakespeare was made detestable to us, and one of the mildest ways at that. He was inflicted on us as "repugnance," as an "impot," and, even worse, as a holiday task. As regards the latter form of pedagogic cruelty there could be no surer way of making the very name of Shakespeare stink in the nostrils of schoolboys for ever: even Edgar Wallace himself could have been stuck at well-nigh mortal blow had his works been set in schools as holiday tasks. The follies of pedagogues have made the plays of Shakespeare a byword and his name a mockery in his own land.

Put Shakespeare Where He Belongs

What can be done to restore Shakespeare to his proper place, to make him not only interesting but lovable to his own people? I believe we can do this by wresting him from the hands of the schoolmasters and restoring him to his friends—the artists and the actors. Not teachers of English, but impresarios, not schoolmasters, but showmen, should have the handling of Shakespeare, the honour of introducing him to the younger generation. If Shakespeare is to be put where he belongs—that is, in the hearts of the English people—he must be treated as he himself would wish to be treated, as an entertainer, not as a task master, a giver of pleasure, not a droler out of penance.

The coming of the talkies has greatly simplified the task involved in carrying out this suggestion. The filming of the plays of Shakespeare as "silent" is indeed, like "Hamlet" without the Prince of Denmark, since the poetry and not the spectacle is the aim; but modern apparatus and modern technique in the film studios have greatly simplified the problem, that filming such works as Shakespeare's plays present. Without going too deeply into technicalities it can be mentioned, for instance, that by means of the Dunning process—by which figures are superimposed upon any setting—and other "tricks of the trade" the production of such films in a manner acceptable to modern youth does not present any great difficulty or entail any huge expense.

The film as an educative force is only just beginning to be appreciated. The tradition of the manual and the copy-book dies hard. Nevertheless, enlightened educationists throughout the country are optimistic for the future, and especially for the increasing of a love of the arts, can the film be of paramount value. In America, Germany, and Italy organisations for the production of films of educative value are in being, and in Germany and Italy receive considerable help from the State. In Germany, for instance, the Entertainment Tax is remitted at cinemas where such films are shown.

Admittedly the sponsors of this movement will have to proceed cautiously, and my opinion is that the film for use in the schools should be regarded as quite apart from that intended for universal consumption at the cinemas. No matter what may be said the box office must receive its due share of attention in the latter case, and the public can be very suspicious of "teaching films." In the public case the showing of unsuitable films of say, the plays of Shakespeare, might easily tend to increase the distrust which such plays already breed in the public mind to-day.

The children, however, are not influenced in their likes and dislikes by the factors that govern box office receipts, and it may well be that the very things which would bore the adult, film-student, would prove the greatest attraction to the younger audiences. Films will have to be very carefully prepared, and by those who not only love Shakespeare, but understand youth.

I am sure that by such means a genuine appreciation of Shakespeare could be coupled with an enlightened view of many aspects of history, and I can imagine the delight of the child in moving, say, Cardinal Wolsey seen, feeling entirely rather than a boring frame or a date in a book, in discovering that Shakespeare could be funny and that he is full of robust humour and comic cross-talk, and that his dramatic scenes can be far "repealer" than any modern "thriller." Then with Shakespeare come to life again and rise from the degradation of boredom and derision to which he has been sunk, to his right position as a glorious, beloved figure in our national consciousness.

15 MEN REMAKING EUROPE

Personalities Of The League Of Nations Council

"JUDGES" OF GERMANY AND ITALY

The Diplomats Who Decide The Fate of The World

EUROPE'S history may be remade next week when the Council of the League of Nations meets to consider the position created by Germany's remilitarisation of the Rhine and Italy's refusal to accept the League terms for a peaceful settlement of the Italo-Ethiopian war.

Personalities composing the Council are here described by a special correspondent who has attended many of its meetings.

Dominating the Council table will be M. Pierre-Etienne Flandin, 6-ft. tall French Foreign Secretary.

A lawyer by profession, M. Flandin is best known among his wide circle of English friends for his frequently comes to England to shoot—as a keen sportsman.

When Finance Minister he went to Britain once to combine politics with sport. Arriving at Dover he found he had forgotten to obtain a permit to bring in his double-barrelled sports gun.

EFFICIENCY

He explained that he was the French Finance Minister, but the British Customs official was doubtful and telephoned the Foreign Office.

"He says he's the French Finance Minister," said the Customs official. "Well," replied the official on duty, "if he says he is, you'd better let him go in."

Rivalling M. Flandin in public interest is M. Maxim Litvinov,

M. Van Zeeland. M. Litvinov.

Signor Grandi, the Italian delegate, long familiar to Londoners during the many years of his Ambassadorship is one of the more independent-minded personalities around Signor Mussolini.

THE PRESIDENT

He is also a great connoisseur of the arts.

Turkey's representative, M. M. Tewfik Arras, better known, before Mustafa Kemal, the Turkish Dictator, changed all Turkish names, as Tewfik Rushdi Bey, played a large part in promoting the Balkan bloc and the closer relations between Turkey and Russia. Like M. Litvinov, he is of Jewish origin.

Other delegates to the Council include M. Van Zeeland, the Belgian Foreign Minister, who, as the representative of the country most affected by the Rhineland coup, is having an important influence upon the decisions of the League of Nations. Senior Ambassador, Senor Ruiz Guinazu, the permanent Argentinian delegate to the League; Dr. Munch, Danish Foreign Minister; and Senor Zaldumbide, the Foreign Minister of Ecuador.

Last, but not least, Mr. Bruce, the Australian High Commissioner, has brought to the Presidency of the Council an atmosphere of Dominion common sense and fair-mindedness.

M. Flandin Signor Grandi.

the Foreign Minister of France's new ally, Soviet Russia. M. Litvinov, now one of the most persuasive examples of the "Geneva atmosphere," was at one time a picturesque revolutionary living in an obscure life in the East, "End of London."

ENGLISH WIFE

Round-faced and bespectacled, and invariably wearing a wide-brimmed soft hat, he has the look of a benign cleric. He speaks English fluently, if with a marked accent.

He is the only Soviet Commissioner with an English wife. While in London he married Miss Ivy Low, who is now regarded as "the first lady of Soviet Russia" at all diplomatic entertainments in Moscow.

The last League Council meeting gave to Colonel Beck, the Polish Foreign Minister, a long-cherished opportunity of coming to London.

Colonel Beck is the man who, more than any other, has been responsible for diverting Polish foreign policy away from Paris towards Berlin. He is the principal architect of the German-Polish Pact.

M. Titulescu, Rumanian Foreign Minister, who also speaks for the Little Entente (Rumania, Czechoslovakia, and Jugoslavia), has for years been one of the most picturesque League personalities.

THE PROFESSOR

Of M. Titulescu it may be said that his facial appearance is Mongolian, his clothes Savile-row, and his mind Parisian.

Spain's delegate is Senor Barcia, the Foreign Minister. But better known to his country is his assistant, Professor Madragara, who, following a number of years in charge of the League Disarmament Section, accepted a professorship at Oxford.

He is small, dark, vivacious, and very witty.

Of Portugal's two delegates, Senor Monteiro and Senor Vasconcellos, the former is Foreign Minister and the latter has come into prominence as the chairman of the League Sanctions Committee, where he has built up for himself a reputation for the calmness and efficiency with which he can control a stormy meeting.

GIVES AWAY CARICATURES

Mr. Laszlo Schwartz, the eminent Hungarian humorist and cartoonist, who will make his first appearance in Hongkong in the Roof Garden of the Hongkong Hotel on Friday. He will also appear in the Grill Room on Saturday.

Shaw Masters Situation Facing Hollywood Jester

Los Angeles, Apr. 10.

G. Bernard Shaw and Mrs. Shaw arriving on their world tour, sought out a quiet spot in a hotel dining room. An earnest young man popped up before the surprised Mr. Shaw, and snapped:

New Colours For British Submarines

London, Apr. 20.

The British Admiralty, after several years of experimenting, has decided to paint its submarines in different colours to "match" the seas where they serve.

The main purpose of the "protective colouring" is to make the undersea craft invisible to low flying airplanes when submerged.

For some time it was the theory of naval experts that grey-green would prove the best colour, regarded as what sea a submarine might be cruising in. But the hues of the oceans vary to such an extent that new shades had to be added.

British submarines operating in the Atlantic ocean, for instance, will remain grey-green but those stationed in the Mediterranean will be royal blue. Curiously, those in the Red Sea will be painted black. Experiments in protective colouring were being carried out when the British submarine M-1 disappeared in 1925. She was painted a pale green colour and it was a trace of this paint, found on the bow of a Scandinavian steamer when she docked in home port several weeks afterward that finally established the fate of the M-1.—United Press.

"I'm Timothy Glitzpiegel—reporter from a Hollywood film paper—got to get an interview from you."

"I saw all the reporters I'm going to see down at the train," Mr. Shaw said.

"But that was old stuff you gave them—you only repeat yourself—"

"What—what, why you—"

"I've got to get this interview. My paper will fire me if I don't."

"What business of mine is it if you get fired? Now we're about to have lunch—"

"Thanks, I'm not hungry."

"Nobody asked you to eat."

"What's this about these English producers making star raids on our Hollywood talent?" the interviewer demanded. "Where'd they get the money—did the English Government subsidize the English studios?"

"Why do American editors persist in misusing the word subsidize?" Mr. Shaw interjected.

"What about persecution in Mexico?" the reporter then asked.

"I didn't know there was any."

"You ought to keep up with current events better than that," Mr. Shaw dropped his fork.

"I make current events," he exploded. "Do you realize I've given you the longest interview I've given in months? And naturally, you'll go and add something to it in your paper."

"Ever hear of Vince Barnett?" asked the young man.

"Oh, you mean that—that ribber—that insulter? Yes."

"Well, meet him."

Mr. Shaw held up his hands and laughed heartily. He shook hands with Hollywood's premier jokester.

MOTHERWELL LOSE

London, Apr. 22. The startling defeat of Tranmere by York City in the northern section of the third division was the feature of today's big list of English Football League matches.

Tranmere are in running for promotion, but this reverse has seriously jeopardised their chances, and Chesterfield now require but three points from three matches to be certain of the championship. Tranmere, with the same number of games played are three points in arrears of the leaders.

Sunderland came a cropper at Leeds, the United winning by three clear goals, while Chelsea gained a valuable point from Portsmouth and have made themselves safe from relegation.

Motherwell were unexpectedly beaten on their own ground by Durnfermline, while Rangers were held to a draw by Hearts, both results materially helping Celtic in their quest for the title.

How City And Suburban Was Won

EASIEST VICTORY OF ALL TIME

London, Apr. 22. The City and Suburban race to-day was an Irish triumph. His Reverence, an Irish horse owned jointly by his trainer and G. F. Annesley, both Irishmen, gained one of the easiest victories in the history of the race at starting price of 100 to 7.

His Reverence led all the way to win by three lengths from Lady Nuthall's Guinea Gap at 100 to 1, and Mrs. Washington Singer's Rippon Tor (0 to 2) which finished third a length away.

Highlander, who became a surprising last-minute favourite at 11 to 1, never showed up at any stage in the race, which was run in cold, but sunny weather.—Reuter.

AND WIN COLONY DOUBLES CROWN

Fighting Finish

(By "Veritas")

Tsui Wai-pui and Tsui Yun-pui beat E. C. Fincher and W. C. Hung 6-8, 7-5, 2-6, 6-4, 6-2.

It is hardly overstating the case to say that a baseline blunder led directly to the defeat of Fincher and Hung in this tremendously tense and often dramatic Colony championship final on the stand court yesterday.

Certainly the decline and fall of the losers could be traced back to that point. It occurred in the fourth set with Fincher and Hung leading by two sets to one and two games to one in Tsui Wai-pui's service. The receivers had game point for a three-one lead, which at that time would almost assuredly have sent them out winners in the fourth set.

Tsui brothers were at the net and there was an exchange of lobs, volleys and counter drives. The ball was volleyed and plainly cleared the baseline by several inches. But the Tsuis went on to win the game, then the set, and finally the match against a very dispirited couple.

Hung undoubtedly allowed the incident to upset him more than it should, but a temporary collapse at such a critical stage of a match is easily understandable, unfortunately with one's mental attitude to the game so vastly changed, it is not so easy to recover equilibrium.

This is not to gainsay the merit of the Tsui brothers' victory. All honour is due to them for their magnificent recovery at a time when they certainly had their tails between their legs. Fincher and Hung still had opportunities of winning the match, but it must be said that from that point onwards they were made to play second fiddle.

Apart from this point, which I, at least, felt to be an error on the part of the linesman, general dissatisfaction was caused by the manner in which one of the line officials gave his decisions. Several times fault services were called after the players had exchanged three and four strokes. This contributed nothing towards the smooth functioning of the match and more than once disconcerted all four players.

CONCERNING THE MATCH

Concerning the match one can say that it was very entertaining, and boasting phases of excellent tennis. One marked feature was the absence of driving and the constant volleying bouts with all four players up at the net. There was some astonishingly clever volleying and equally as effective lobbing.

Fincher, until midway through the fourth set, was the best player on view, seldom making a mistake and constantly discovering gaps in the opposition with timely volleys down the middle of the court. It was after the Tsuis had taken a lead in the fourth set that Fincher began to lose his touch and in the final stanza was making all sorts of mistakes, in particular with overhead smashes.

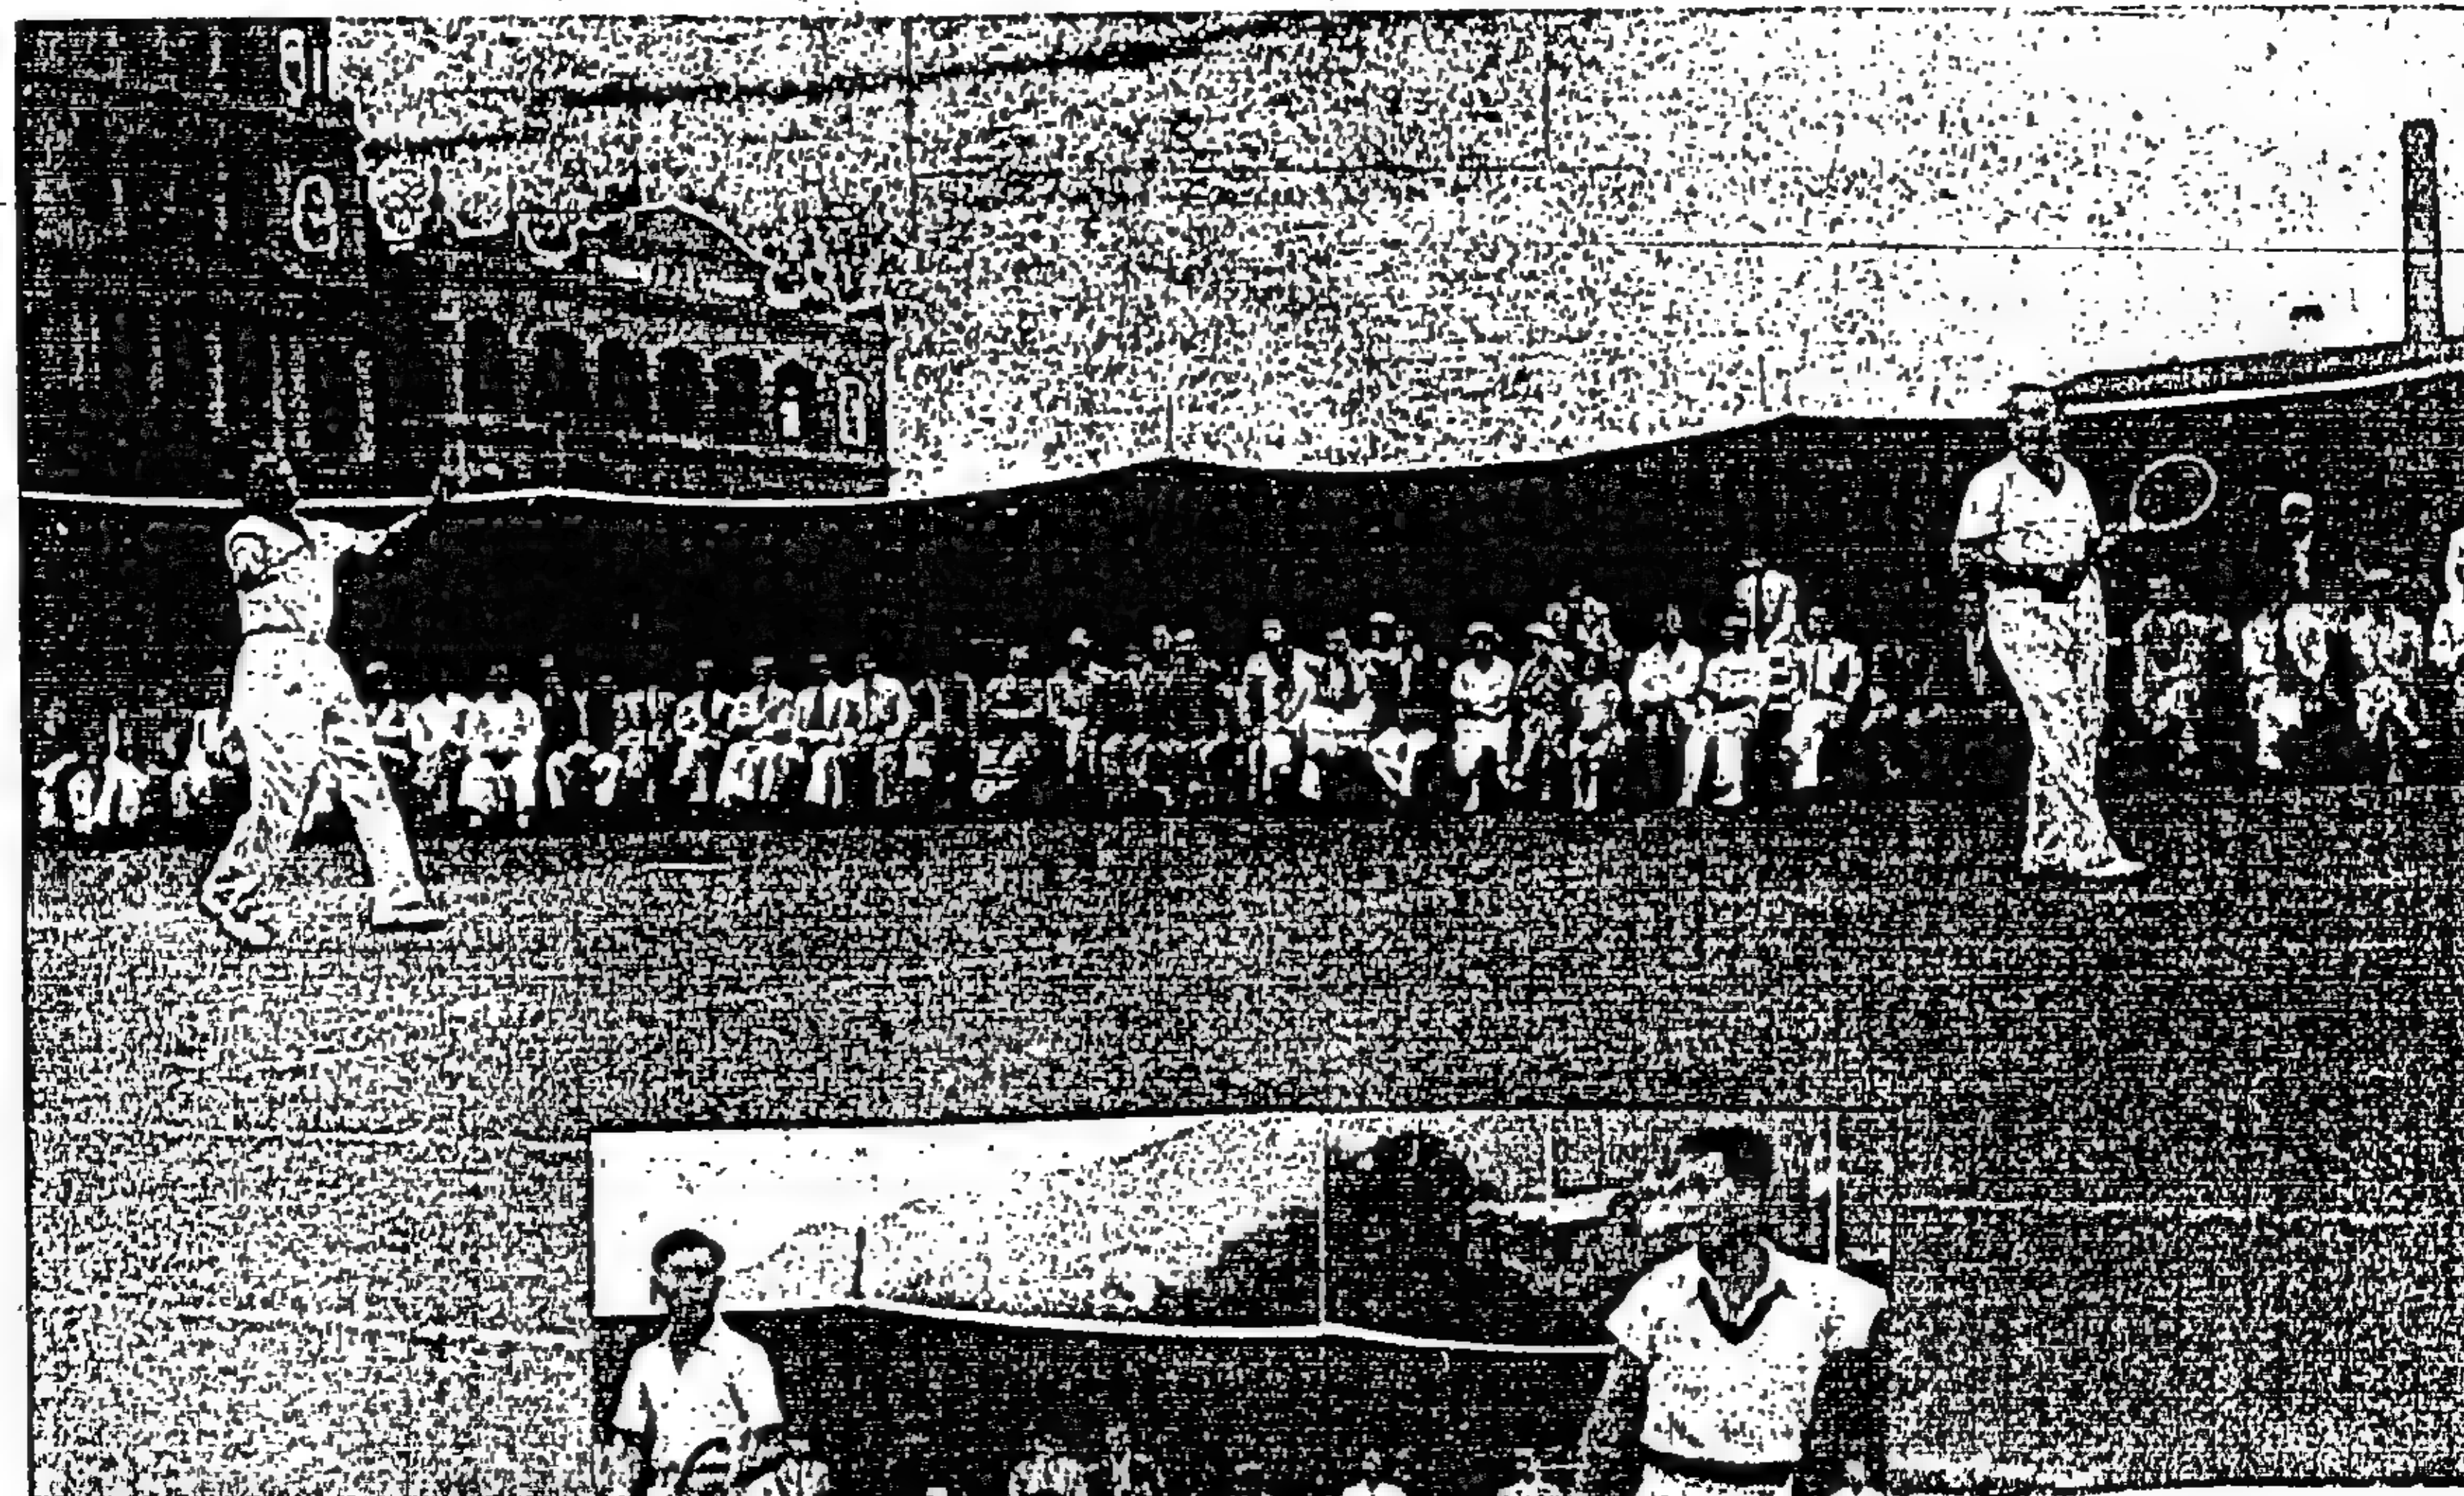

For three sets the K.C.C. pair played slightly the better tennis. They should have won the second as well as the first set, but Hung dropped his service at a critical stage after he and Fincher had been within two points of the set on Tsui Wai-pui's service. However, they rallied strongly in the third set and obtained an early breakthrough which they consolidated after Tsui Yun-pui had pulled them back to 4-2, by again winning Wai-pui's delivery.

EXUBERANT TENNIS

By this time the K.C.C. couple were playing exuberant tennis and had the Chinese strictly on the defensive. Hung was continually scoring with some timely volleys and very determined smashes. Only off the ground did he show any distinct weakness. Then came the incident which completely undermined his confidence and brought about such a rapid change of fortune.

It was the Tsui's turn to take the initiative and they merit full marks for the manner in which they seized the opportunity. Tsui Yun-pui, who had been playing steadily throughout (much more so than his brother) was galvanised into assertive action, scoring time and again with neat.

WILL HE NEVER WIN IT?

Yesterday Teddy Fincher played in his fourth Colony-doubles tennis championship final in five years. But the title still eludes him. Twice before he has figured in five set matches, on both occasions enjoying advantages as he did yesterday with W. C. Hung.

But still Teddy can't win a Colony championship, and those who believe in fate say he never will. His previous three gallant failures were with L. Goldman and they were in successive years 1932, 33, 34.

Yesterday was Hung's second final in succession. Last year he and Ho Ka-lau lost to the Rumjahn cousins.

So Far This Year—

Tsui Wai-pui has won four tennis titles. He is now holder of the two Colony championships, and recently he retained the Chinese Recreation Club singles crown and with his brother, Tsui Yun-pui, won the club's doubles championship.

What he most desires now is to figure in a winning Interport team against Shanghai.

CRICKET BAT TREES ARE DYING

English Willows Ravished By Disease

London. In a last effort to save from extinction what was up to quite recently a flourishing Essex industry, the Essex County Council have sent out an S.O.S. enlisting the help of all who live in the rural areas of the county. What the council desires now is to figure in a winning Interport team against Shanghai.

Now this industry is threatened with extinction in a season or two unless the rapidly spreading ravages of the watermark disease are overcome. Hundreds of trees nearing maturity are badly affected, particularly in the valleys of the Blackwater and Colne. The losses to Essex growers during the past year are estimated at £50,000.

The cause is a microbe or bacterium, which has been definitely isolated. What is not definitely known yet is how this bacterium is carried from tree to tree and investigations are proceeding in an attempt to discover this.

LOCAL YACHTING

A team race held yesterday between the Royal Artillery and the Royal Engineers was won by the former by three points. The course, over a distance of eight miles was as follows: Channel Rocks (P), Rumsey Shoal (P), N. mark on line (P), twice round.

CHANGES AHEAD FOR SQUASH

Tests with New Ball and Racket

Signs have not been wanting recently that the game of squash is still in a state of evolution, and that important changes in the rules and apparatus may be made between now and the beginning of next season.

International problems are occupying the attention of the S.R.A. The Bath Club Cup may be decided in future on three games per match instead of five; experiments are being made officially with a new ball and with a suitable racket for it.

The new ball is designed to assist the work of the S.R.A. in bringing the rules of the U.S.A., Canada, and Great Britain into alignment, so that one country can meet another upon common ground instead of having to learn, so to speak, a different language for international matches and tours. The racket will also assist in the solution of this problem. In fact, the progress of the S.R.A. in this connection has been so rapid that a meeting is about to be called of the Executive Committee to discuss the application of an international code of rules and the standardisation of a new ball and racket.

AN OPPORTUNE SUGGESTION

At this opportune moment a public expression of opinion which may contribute a great deal to the advancement of an international code of rules, and at the same time form a line of approach to the simplification of our domestic problems, has been made by Mr. S. M. Toynce, affectionately known as the "Father of Northern Squash."

At the prize distribution at the North of England Women's Championship he advocated a change to the American system of scoring, i.e., fifteen up and every point won to add one to a player's score.

It will be clear why the United States had no patience with the apparently "laborious" and "illogical" method of having to waste a point to obtain "hand in." They have no veneration for rackets proper, from which this method has descended to us, obviate the winning of games on service, or at least to make it more difficult, to put it mildly, to score service ones as in rackets. Moreover, as squash, in form, following and practice, continues more violently to repudiate its ancestor, and as rackets players mostly regard it as nothing but a horrid offshoot of their game, there seems no reason to perpetuate such a method on sentimental grounds.

DUAL PURPOSE

So much for the negative side of the "hand in" and "hand out" system and now for the positive side of Mr. Toynce's suggestion. Internationally, it would enable a big advance to be made in one stride towards universality; domestically, it might go a long way towards solving the problem raised by the Bath Club Cup players—that the game has become too strenuous to make it either a wise means to exercise or an enjoyable pastime. It is therefore worthy of the most careful consideration by all followers of the game.

It is to general advantage to make the change the International side of the question can be taken as settled. It is not one of those changes that can be dismissed on the grounds that it would sacrifice the British game to the transient requirements of an encounter between this country and U.S.A. or Canada. It appears, on the surface, at least, to have the merit of shortening the game and restricting it to essentials.

FOOTBALL

TWO LEAGUE MATCHES

RECREIO HELD TO A DRAW

WELL CONTESTED GAMES

Two first division league football matches were played yesterday, both resulting in a draw with an aggregate of four goals.

Kowloon performed exceptionally well to take a point from Club de Recreio. They owed a great deal to Boyes who played a superb game in goal. It was therefore a pity that a misunderstanding between Boyes and Everett should have led directly to Recreio's equaliser. Everett tapped the ball back to the goalkeeper, but he was unprepared and the ball scraped by the upright for a corner. From the place kick Bormio Gosans scored with a first time shot.

This was in the closing stages. Earlier on both goals have experienced narrow escapes. Forward lines were enterprising in midfield, but were apt to lose confidence before goal. Recreio were the more polished team, but Kowloon played with rare spirit and fully held their own.

Gosans among the forwards and Beltrao at centre-half shone for the Portuguese, while Kowloon were very well served by G. White in the attack, Bliss as pivot and Boyes in goal.

A goalless first half was a fair reflection of the exchanges, but it came as some surprise when G. White broke away unopposed and got clean through for goal. But he was tripped in the penalty area, and taking the kick himself, put Kowloon ahead. The equaliser came late in the game, but it was deserved.

SOLDIERS PLAY A DRAW

Royal Ulsters And East Lancs.

Royal Ulsters and East Lancshires shared the spoils in a fast and entertaining match on the Chatham Road ground. The Ulsters faced a goal deficit at half time, but they rallied strongly and pulled a full marks-for-their-equaliser which came five minutes after the restart.

There were some surprises in the East Lancs' line-up. Steele, usually left back, figuring at inside left. The experiment was not a tremendous success. Positional changes were also made throughout the game. Ridings being the only man to retain his normal position.

Sandford was easily the pick of the forwards and Lawton the outstanding half back. Gorman has played much better games, but it must be confessed that he was out of position.

Irwin and Doherty constituted a smart right wing for the Lancs and most of the attacks came from this flank. Coyle was a lively half back, though rather severe in his tackling. Sandford gave the East Lancs a first half lead, but Ulster Rifles came back strongly and Ferguson recorded the equaliser with a smart header from Irwin's ideal centre.

ARE NEW SWIMMING RULES NEEDED?

Japanese Minister's Ideas Meet With Approval

Tokyo, Apr. 20. In addition to being known as the sharp-tongued spokesman of the Japanese Foreign Office, Mr. Elihu Amata to-day loomed as a potential reformer of the rules in aquatic competition. In a modern version of the old adage that a prophet often goes unnoticed among his own people, Mr. Amata to-day found that he had been catapulted into the headlines of American sports magazines when the same idea, written and printed by a Japanese publication under his name, had failed to arouse even the mildest interest.

The story goes back to the invasion of Japan by American swimmers last year. Mr. Amata, who in his more leisurely days was an adept follower of the Kwankai School of Japanese swimming, went and watched the contests. It struck him, so he says in his article, that the tall Americans were at an advantage when competing against his short, stocky countrymen both at the start and at the turns in the tanks.

Thereupon, he suggested that future swimming races should start with the competitors in the water, away from walls that enable them to sprint into action, and that turns should be made around buoys, again away from the sides of the tank so that the present practice of pushing against the walls with their feet would be eliminated. The idea, American magazines indicate, has met with the approval of experts in the United States.

Baseline Decision Affects Tennis Match

placements. Wai-pui also regained his courage which had been perceptibly waning and the two strode on to a magnificent victory.

After snatching the fourth set in the tenth game, they monopolized the court to take a five-love lead in the final set. It was a startling reversal of fortune. But Fincher and Hung revealed grand fighting resources, and after holding Fincher's service, broke through Tsui Wai-pui's, a fine lob which only just cleared the baseline gave the Chinese the winning point for the title.

There was hint of over-confidence in Tsui Wai-pui's earlier play, and although he was conspicuous for a number of brilliant shots, it was noticeable that he was more liable to errors than his brother. Fincher and Hung, fairly naturally, concentrated on the younger Tsui, but this served only to stiffen his game. He wasn't able to stop the K.C.C. couple from securing their points in the first three sets, but when later the time came for offensive tactics, his strokes showed themselves to be in perfect working order. Yun-pui served magnificently, but once permitting a break-through.

ON THE WHOLE—EXCEEDINGLY WELL

On the whole Tsui played exceedingly well. He was more effective at the net from the base. Some of his forehand drives were atrocious shots, notably off service, but like the other three players, he volleyed with commendable judgment.

Tsui Wai-pui was spectacular as always, flashing out apparently impossible shots to win vital points. His backhand, whether on the volley or off the ground was brilliantly efficient.

Thus, after a palpitating match lasting two hours, the 1936 Colony tennis championships were brought to a close. Tsui Wai-pui, capping all previous achievements, joins Ng Szewong and S. A. Runjahn in the select band of players who have won both singles and doubles titles in the same year. But one must not ignore that he was considerably aided, in this quest, by his brother, who has made impressive progress during the past twelve months, and who will one day himself win the singles championship.

To the Hongkong Cricket Club officials more than a modicum of merit is deserving for the manner in which they conducted the tournament. It has finished within six weeks, about the quickest time on record. Perhaps the general level of tennis has not been as high as one would expect, but it is significant to note that the titles have been won by young players. Possibly this will inaugurate a new era of brighter and better tennis in Hongkong.

A "Wappinshaw" game will be played for spoons which have been presented, selected from the following players: Messrs. E. Kern, Fletcher, Pengelly, C. J. Tucci, Nash, Dinnen, Broadbridge and Ramsay.

and stronger feeling in less exalted circles that the game, as it now stands with the slower ball, is fundamentally wrong because it has become too much like hard labour for the player no longer in the full vigour of youth. It has been noticed, too, in some of this season's championships that even the fittest players of the younger generation have found it maddening of a physical ordeal.

Mr. Toynne has additional and equally good reasons for advocating it. He says: "By the English method, the published score sheet does not represent the merit of the loser. Take an extreme example. X beat Y 11-1, although X scored 100 points to Y's 91. X beats Z 9-0, although Z may have not scored a single ace. To the reader, a game lasting, say, 20 minutes, and one lasting, say, 3 minutes, appear to be the same. It shortens each game, and also prevents a player who is a little better normally than his opponent from playing lazily when serving, and it encourages a loser to go for the shots. Good serving would be encouraged, and some of the 'sloppy' services which we see would soon disappear. If only some competition would try it out, I am sure that American scoring would be popular."

THE COLLIER-NUTTING SADDLE-SEAT UMBRELLA

LAST OF THE PAGANS

Adapted by CHARLES REED JONES from
the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture

Lilleo and a group of Polynesian maidens are surprised at their morning bath by Taro and his Typee warriors. Some of the girls escape and speed back to the village of Tofoa to sound the alarm. Lilleo is captured by Mula. When the Tofoa warriors rally to repel the invaders, Mula is told her again of the Typee raiders. The search for Lilleo continues, but Mula, hiding behind a screen of water under a cataract, manages to evade the searchers. Then, as darkness falls on the island, Mula steals a Tofoa canoe, and he and his unwilling captives set sail for Nukahiva, the island of the Typees.

Chapter III

Throughout the night Mula paddled on tirelessly. The bright stars of the heavens, mela reva, guided him straightly over the dark waters toward his goal. Lilleo slept. Exhausted from the wearing events of the day before, she dozed on until the bright sun of a new day awoke slowly out of the blue. Awakening refreshed after her long sleep, Lilleo stared in confusion at the sky above her. Then, spying the friendly, smiling face of Mula, she turned on him savagely.

"Aita! hoi!" she demanded angrily. "Where are you taking Lilleo?"

"To my island," he told her. Then smiling, he added, "Now, you are Mula's woman."

"No!" Lilleo was defiant. "Yes!" he repeated, and she turned her back to him.

As she stared out over the sea, Mula leaned forward. Taking his heavy necklace of shark's teeth from around his neck, he dropped it over her head.

"Yes," he said again, for, in Typee, such a necklace, worn by a woman, was a sign of betrothal.

Lilleo, angered, anew, jumped to her feet. Pulling the necklace from her throat, she threw it at him.

The slimsy craft rocked dangerously. Mula advanced to her, trying to steady the canoe. Lilleo tried to push him from her. She reeled unsteadily for a moment, lost her balance, and pitched headlong into the water. Mula regained his seat and replaced the necklace about his neck. Watching her with amusement, he swung the canoe around and kept it within easy distance of her.

Instinctively, she turned from the canoe and struck out strongly away from him.

"Makool! Makool! Sharks!" Terror-stricken, she turned and struck out for the canoe.

"Yes?" he asked. "Mula's woman?"

"No!" Mula, deftly manipulating his paddle-spear, kept the boat just beyond her reach.

"Yes?" he demanded again.

"Yes! Yes!" she pleaded desperately.

Smiling happily, he reached down and lifted the frightened girl from the water. Safe in the canoe now, Lilleo's first thought was of the shark that had caused the alarm. But, there was no shark, and Lilleo's ire flared anew as she knew that Mula had tricked her again.

Wet, miserable, angry, Lilleo sulked. Again, Mula turned to his paddle and pushed on towards Nukahiva and home.

"Mula's village," he told her proudly, but she gave no sign that she had heard him. Then, as they neared the island, he told her again of the Typee homeland. And, again, after a manner of a Typee lover, he boasted of his own prowess as a hunter and a warrior, but Lilleo feigned sleep.

"Mula! Mula!" The shrill, excited cry came from a small boy on the beach.

"Time! Time!" Mula called the boy's name in reply.

Lilleo could no longer conceal her curiosity, and, as she sat up and peered towards the beach, she saw the youngster fleeing to the village to spread the glad news of Mula's return.

Fishermen dropped their tapa nets for the repaired another day; warriors put aside their mariri spears to be sharpened later; youngsters forsook their games of javelin-throwing and archery; and women suspended their household tasks. Taro, their chief, led the way, as the whole village surged back to the beach to welcome Mula.

The crowd lined the shore, as Mula beached the canoe. Jumping into the shallow water, he caught Lilleo in his arms and swung her onto the dry, white sand. The villagers stepped back to clear a path for them, and, as Mula led Lilleo through the double file, the Typees joined in the song of welcome to the ruhine who was to become one of them.

Taro stood at the end of the line. Mula raised his right hand high before him in salute. Taro ignored the greeting. He grasped Lilleo by the wrist and spun her around, facing her. The girl recoiled in terror, but Taro held her fast. Mula intervened angrily.

"Already, three women sit in Taro's house," he challenged. "This one is Mula's woman!"

"I am the chief!" Taro told him haughtily.

"The law of our tribe says that man who wins woman keeps woman," Mula insisted.

Taro reluctantly released his grip on Lilleo. She clung gratefully to Mula, as he took her arm and led her towards the village. The Typees a procession to escort them to their home. The chief did not join the others. He stood apart, as they passed on, but his eye did not leave Lilleo until she had passed from his view.

Taro's determined interest in Lilleo was a source of amusement to two old warriors who knew their chief well.

"Is it that Mula has brought a woman for himself or for Taro?" one of them asked slyly, and they both laughed at his joke.

When Mula reached his own hut, his mother was standing at the doorway, waiting to greet him. Solemnly and reverently after the manner of the Typees, he approached her, and he brushed his cheek lightly against hers, as was the custom. They did not speak. The ritual of their greeting finished, Mula stepped aside so that his mother might welcome Lilleo. The older woman examined the ruhine critically, and, apparently, her scrutiny satisfied her.

"Mula's mother gives welcome to a new daughter," she said in all friendliness.

"This woman is not your daughter," Lilleo replied obstinately, and she turned away.

"But, Mula is my son," the mother continued, for she could not believe that any Tofoa would refuse him.

"This woman is not Mula's woman," Mula's mother understood now. She did not choose to argue with Lilleo. Instead, she nodded in sympathetic understanding.

"The ruhine is comely," she said significantly. "If she does not want Mula, other men wait."

Lilleo looked at the group around her that the older woman indicated. Younger men, fearing Mula's spear, had not dared to approach too closely. It was a group of old warriors, their dark, parched skin emblazoned with hideous tatu-tatu, tattooings, that met her gaze. Instantly, she recoiled from them, as she had recoiled from Taro a short time before.

Rehna, the mother, placed a sheltering arm around the girl's shoulder, and Lilleo smiled her gratitude.

"Enter, my daughter," Rehna invited. "Mula's mother makes you welcome."

Lilleo looked uncertainly from Rehna to Mula. She feared the ugly warriors who gazed from the near distance, and she dared not remain among them without Mula's protection. On the other hand, according to the custom of her own people, the Tofoas, to enter the home of a warrior's mother was to acknowledge him as her son, her husband; and Lilleo was not yet ready to submit to her captor.

Again, Rehna's intuition stood her in good stead, for woman-like she knew the workings of this ruhine's mind.

"Mula will go away," she assured her.

"Aita! Mula objected. 'Mula will go.'"

"Mula will go away," Rehna repeated; and Mula, wisely, bowed deferentially.

Still, Lilleo was undecided. She wanted to trust him, but she feared trickery, for Mula had tricked her many times before. Then, suddenly, her mind was made up, for she saw Taro stalking towards them through the crowd. And Lilleo knew Taro was coming for her.

Without a word, she turned and fled into the house. Rehna turned and followed. A curtain of white tapa cloth dropped over the doorway.

Mula took his position before the hut, his back to the doorway. His paddle-spear in his right hand, he waited to meet his chief.

FLOOD OF RUMOURS IN ROME

ETHIOPIAN LEADER IN FLIGHT?
BADOGLIO MAY BE WOUNDED

(Special To "Telegraph")

Rome, Apr. 22.
Newspapers to-day are flooded with rumours, none of which officials are able to confirm.

The first is that Emperor Haile Selassie is flying to refuge in Sweden. This report comes from Djibouti, in French Somaliland. It is linked with the story from Addis Ababa that the Crown Prince and the Empress have taken over the Ethiopian Government. There is a report that the northern Ethiopian army has been defeated.

Another tale is that the Emperor is in flight to Kenya or Egypt, and that the Italian troops have occupied Addis Ababa, Harar, and Djibouti.

Finally, to cap all the papers publish conflicting statements about the two most famous of the Italian commanders in East Africa. Marshal Pietro Badoglio and the southern army's commander, General Graziani, are variously reported as missing, wounded and sick.—United Press.

Laws Of War Violated

EDEN ASKED WHAT ACTION PLANNED

London, Apr. 22.
The Foreign Secretary was questioned in the House of Commons this afternoon regarding violations of the laws of war by both belligerents in East Africa. Mr. Eden recounted the action taken by the League of Nations in recent weeks on this matter, and, in particular, the efforts made to obtain additional information which would enable the Committee of Twelve to decide what further steps it might appear proper to take.

Mr. Eden reminded the House that the Committee had already, in connection with the alleged use of poison-gas, expressed to the Italian Government their opinion that the use of such gas could not be justified as a punishment for the alleged atrocities of an adversary.

Pressed in supplementary questions to say whether the allegations of both sides were well founded, Mr. Eden said that it must be a matter of opinion whether the documentary or other evidence so far available was sufficient to establish the facts. Clearly in such cases it was necessary to be extremely careful and to be absolutely certain as to the validity of the sources. At the same time, an important distinction would have to be drawn between individual acts of barbarism, if they were proved, and actions which, should they be established, would involve responsibility of the High Command on either side.

In the course of a reply to one of many questions on the conduct of the war in Abyssinia, Mr. Eden said that, so far as he was aware, everything possible had been done by the British Government to provide adequate protection in case of need for British ambulance units serving with the Ethiopian forces.—British Wireless.

British Art In Industry

EDUCATION OF CONSUMER

London, Apr. 22.
The Council of Industry, in January, 1934, by the Board of Trade to deal with questions affecting relations between art and industry describes, in the second annual report, just presented, the aims which it has adopted. These are:—First, education of the consumer in appreciation of design; secondly, training in design of industrial personnel; and, thirdly, encouragement of good design in manufactures by making it easier for firms to establish contact with skilled designers and by information on current standards of design.

The Council has been instrumental in the establishment, in connection with a number of industries, including textiles and pottery, of committees in which representatives of the industry and education are co-operating in preparation of schemes of training. A national register of industrial designers is under consideration. Much has been done towards the education of the public and the making known of standards of good design to manufacturers by means of exhibitions of industrial art.—British Wireless.

NEW HOPEI RAILWAY

Peking, Apr. 23.
Chinese reports state that the Hopei Council has completed arrangements for the construction of a railway from Tsingtau, south of Tientsin, across Hopei to Shihchihwang, a distance of about 170 miles, at a cost of $10,000,000. How the money is to be raised is not stated.—Reuter.

ST. LOUIS OUTHITS DETROIT

CINCINNATI BEATS CARDINALS
THREE GAMES POSTPONED

New York, Apr. 22.
The weather again interfered with the Big Leagues' baseball fixtures, the Pittsburgh Pirates match with the Chicago Cubs being cancelled, and the American League games between New York Yankees and Philadelphia Athletics, and Boston Red Sox and Cleveland Indians, all on account of the cold.

Weather did not affect the 'lowly' St. Louis Browns, however. In a furious burst of hitting they got safely to bases eighteen times and scored twelve runs against the dazed Tigers, last year's pennant winners.

The only other American League game was Washington Senators' at home to the Boston Red Sox. The Sox won four to three, scoring on only six hits as against their opponents twelve. There were no errors.

HOMERS HELP

Assisted by home runs from Chapman and Briggs, Cincinnati Reds nudged out the St. Louis Cardinals, seven to six.

The Reds benefited from three Cardinal errors, and hit safely ten times to the Cards' seven.

Wilson's homer did not help the Philadelphia Phillies much against the Giants. New York hit consistently, landing out sixteen safeties for seven runs. Leiber hit a homer for the winners.

Earnshaw, the Brooklyn Dodgers' ace, only allowed Boston's Bruins five hits and not a single run, when the Bees entertained him. Brooklyn scored five runs on ten hits.—Reuter.

GENERAL MOTORS SALES SOAR

EXPECT TO PRODUCE 2,000,000 CARS

Saginaw, Mich., Apr. 22.
According to the present rate of retail sales, it seems likely the April purchases of General Motors products will create a record.

Mr. Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., President of General Motors, disclosed this fact to a business men's luncheon to-day, adding there was now a good likelihood that in 1936 General Motors' output in the United States and Canada, and overseas would total 2,000,000 cars.

According to the industrial Conference Board industrial activity in March advanced slightly, with a further improvement in the first fortnight in April. The expansion of the automobile and steel industries is largely responsible.—Reuter Special.

BULL FIGHTING ABOLISHED

ALOR STAR COMES INTO LINE

Alor Star, Apr. 22.
The bull-ring here, which is one of the important stopping-places of the Imperial Airways service to Australia, was closed for the first time when the Sultan of Kedah passed a Bill forbidding bull-fighting in Kedah, under penalty of a fine of $100, or three months' imprisonment.

The Bill also prohibits cat-fighting. Kedah was the last place in the British Empire in which bull-fighting was allowed.—Reuter Special.

"RED" COTTON INCREASE

SOVIET WILL SOON BE AN EXPORTER

London, Apr. 22.
The Soviet estimates it can produce 3,500,000 bales more of cotton in 1936 than ever it has before, according to the Financial Times. Production is being stimulated by increased payments for high yields in cotton growing sections. If this rate of increase continues, says the Journal, the Soviet will find itself in the position of an exporter.—Reuter.

SELLING LOAN COTTON

New York, Apr. 22.
According to official reports to the A.A.A., over 300,000 bales of loan cotton will be moved to the market within three weeks.—Reuter Special.

RAIN PROBABLE

The anticyclone which developed over China yesterday has moved eastward into the Yellow Sea, and the depression has moved to the east of Hokkaido. An irregular and shallow depression covers S.W. China and Tongking. The typhoon has probably recovered a north-easterly, or is filling up to the east of Luzon. Local forecasts:—S.E. winds, moderate; cloudy generally, probably some rain.

BATTLE OVER NEW TAX BILL

SHARP CLEAVAGE IN CONGRESS
REPUBLICANS UP IN ARMS

Washington, Apr. 22.
President F. D. Roosevelt's new Tax Bill, which was introduced into the House of Representatives yesterday, has raised a bitter controversy, portending a sharp congressional battle which will extend to the presidential campaign.

Leaders of the attack upon the measure stood their ground in spite of the President's renewed warning that passage of the bill is necessary to balance the ordinary budget.

Republicans are calling the bill a "foolish experiment and a face-saving gesture."

It is understood President Roosevelt made his position clear at a secret conference of Congress leaders yesterday.

It is estimated that the proposed taxes will yield $702,000,000 (U.S. currency) during the first year of their operation. Some authorities express the view that the revenue will be swelled by $800,000,000 to $850,000,000.

MINORITY REPORT

The Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, which considered the Tax Bill, have presented a minority report, indicating the issue may be made a major campaign issue. They oppose the new taxes, they say, until the waste of public money is stopped.

They maintain the bill is unsound in principle and will undermine business stability. It is not designed so much to raise revenue as it is to experiment along another New Deal avenue.

The Republicans warn against passage of such a measure in view of the fact that the public debt is rising at the rate of several billions of dollars yearly. No effort is being made to balance the budget, they complain, and federal credit is stretched to the limit. It is dangerous, they say finally, to experiment with federal revenue at this time.—United Press.

Brawl Led To Stabbing

"LUCKY ESCAPE FROM BEING HANGED"

"It seems to me you had a lucky escape from being hanged. If this man had not been attended to, he might easily have been hanged," remarked Mr. W. Schofield at the Central Police Court this morning when he imposed a fine of $50 with the alternative of six weeks' hard labour on Yuen Mui, 17, apprentice fitter, who pleaded guilty to assaulting another apprentice fitter, Chung Ying-lung, aged 19 years, at a foundry in Hennessy Road, Wanchai. The defendant was also bound over in a personal bond of $100 to keep the peace for a year.

Detective Sergeant D. Fitches stated the defendants lived together with others on the top floor of the foundry. During the fight which occurred yesterday the party went to the roof to gamble and they played a game similar to pitch and toss. An argument arose between the complainant and defendant. No blows were exchanged.

The defendant went downstairs and returned with a knife. He lunged at the complainant and inflicted an injury to his right wrist severing the artery. The defendant ran downstairs and hid the weapon under his bed. Three hours later he gave himself up to the police.

Sergeant Fitches rendered first aid to the injured man.
